While this question was being discussed a letter was read from W. J. Paul, M.P., stating that he had been authorized by Hon. Col. Sam. Hughes, Minister of Militia, to say that the Department was ready to call for tenders for the erection of a drill hall in Napanee, as soon as the deed for the required land had been turned over to department.

The Township of North Fredericksburgh is willing to contribute $100 towards repairing the hill, the County Council is also willing to contribute $100, and it was:

TO HAVE UNION JAIL

FRONTENAC AND LENNOX AND ADDINGTON UNITE.

The Scheme Will Save Each Council a Lot of Money—The Kingston Jail to Serve the Counties.

(Kingston Whig, June 14th.)

The County Councils of Frontenac and of Lennox and Addington have decided to unite for jail purposes. A decision was reached on Friday afternoon, after a conference between committees of each council. The suggestion came from the Lennox and Addington Council that the act passed by the Ontario government last year might well be taken advantage of by the two counties. One jail was considered quite sufficient for both. A basis of agreement was adopted whereby the Kingston jail will be made to serve the purpose, and each county will save some hundreds of dollars yearly thereby.

The basis of agreement is: Lennox and Addington to pay according to the number of prisoners, pro rata as follows: 1, cost of maintenance; 2, salaries of jail officials; 3, cost of jail repairs; 4, interest at five per cent. on capital account on a fair value of the Kingston jail buildings which is fixed at $40,000; 5, cost of Lennox and Addington prisoners who wish to return to the place whence they came to be paid by the council of that county.

This basis of agreement was signed by both committees, and when presented to the Frontenac council, in session, it was adopted, on motion of Councillors Gordon and Truscott.

The Lennox and Addington committee consisted of the following: Warden Matthew Ryan; Charles Hambly, Reeve of North Fredericksburgh; Walter Platt, reeve of Adolphustown; Robert W. Longmore, reeve of Ernestown; G. A. Wartman, reeve of Bath; Herbert Armstrong, deputy reeve of Camden, and W. G. Wilson, Napanee, county clerk.

The Frontenac committee consisted of Warden Spankie and Councillors Hamilton, Franklin, Gordon and Freeman.

The next step will be to secure the concurrence of the Ontario government to the jail union, and the Frontenac council named Warden Spankie, Councillor Gordon and Clerk J. W. Bradshaw as its representatives to wait upon the government in conjunction with a committee from Lennox and Addington, and the two county members.

In the discussion, it was shown that the average number of prisoners incarcerated in the Napanee jail during the year was less than two a day. The Kingston average is about ten, and the jail can accommodate sixty

WOULD CHARGE RAILWAY

Shippers Want Tit-for-Tat In Car Demurrage.

OTTAWA, June 17.—That companies should not be allowed to charge shippers for time taken loading freight, and still enjoy immunity from charges from ship case of delay by the railway companies themselves, is the contention being urged by the representatives of various manufacturing and shippers' associations before the Railway Commission.

The plaintiffs want a system of "reciprocal demurrage" to be introduced in Canada. This system is in use in California and other states, where a railway company, when it becomes liable to a fine, it becomes liable to a fine.

The application heard by the commission yesterday came from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It suggested a system of average demurrage, whereby a shipper would be credited with one day if he used a car within 24 hours of arrival, he could not unload within 48 hours he would be charged demurrage one day, and so on. At the moment the total number of credits would be deducted from the total number of days debited, at a dollar per day charged for the remainder. If the credits equalled the debits no charge would be made for the detention of the car. Evidence on behalf of both applicants and of the railway companies heard by the commission yesterday and a decision will be given later.

Mr. J. E. Walsh of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association said shippers were not trying to make any out of the railways, and were willing that the penalties collected go to the crown if a better system were thereby assured. Reciprocal demurrage had justified its adoption by the United States and had demonstrated that the railway, rather than the shipper, was responsible for delay.

Reforms in U. S.

The President expects the curb bill to be launched in both House and Senate some time this week. BIG TANNERY BURNED

Toronto Plant Suffers Loss of About $400,000.

Wickett and Craig's Establishment Is Visited by a Spectacular Conflagration Which Breaks Out in the Chemical Room and Spreads Quickly to the Oil-Soaked Hides—Firemen Had a Hard Task.

TORONTO, June 17.—One of the most spectacular and at the same time worst fires to fight which has occurred this year in Toronto, broke out at 11.40 last night in the top floor of the tannery owned by Wickett and Craig, Limited, situated on the Don Esplanade, at the corner of Eastern avenue. Before the fire was extinguished at an early hour this morning, the entire centre portion of the building had been destroyed, and valuable machinery, the entire stock of leather and chemicals were consumed.

The fire started among the chemicals stored on the top floor of the four-storey building, and used for treating the leather before it is tanned.

The leather, piled in heaps on the third and fourth floors, was soaked with oil, and burned very quickly. The flames leaped up the elevator shaft and burst through the roof in a red glare which could be seen all over the eastern end of the city. The firemen, handicapped as they were by the intense heat, soon were on ladders pouring tons of water into the burning building, at the direction of the chief and his deputy. The flames ate their way through the roof, and soon the crashing of heavy burning timber warned the firemen that it was dangerous to remain too near the building.

Interviewed at one o'clock yesterday morning at the factory, Mr. Craig stated that the loss would amount to $400,000. Covered fairly well by insurance. The stock and machinery, he said, was worth $300,000, and the damaged to the building amounted to $100,000.

Products Entering U. S. May Have Countervailing Duty.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—The much-mooted agriculture schedule of the Underwood tariff bill was suddenly upset again by the majority members of the Senate yesterday, when a motion was made to reconsider action taken earlier in the day approving the free listing of live stock and wheat, subject to a countervailing duty.

The proposal now is to strike out the provision for a countervailing duty and leave cattle, sheep, hogs and wheat on the free list until restricted. Members of the committee said last night that this would be done.

The Senate finance sub-committee, soon after receiving the schedule, agreed to equalize the rates and eventually voted to make the raw materials and the finished products all dutiable. No sooner had this conclusion been reached than Senator Simmons and other Democratic members of the Senate determined that the problem would not be settled rightly if settled that way.

WOUNDS CAUSED DEATH

No Water Found in Bruce's Lungs Say Doctors.

Inquest Into Death of Farm Hand Near Galt Is Adjourned Until Tomorrow After the Result of the Autopsy Is Given — Bruce Was Either Dead or Insensible When Put Into Water, Says Physician.

GALT, June 17.—A coroner's jury opened an inquest into the death of James Bruce, whose body was found floating in the Grand River. An adjournment was taken after hearing the result of the autopsy which seems to prove conclusively that Bruce met with foul play.

So strongly are the authorities impressed with the gravity of the case, that Inspector William Greer, of the Provincial Detective Department, has been assigned to investigate, and was here last evening at the adjournment of the inquest.

The court room was filled to overflowing when Dr. Radford, coroner, opened the proceedings. H. A. Secord acted for Crown Attorney Bowlby and examined at great length the two medical witnesses who with John Bruce, brother of the dead man, were called, an adjournment being ordered until Wednesday at one o'clock.

Dr. Dakin read his report of the autopsy. He said there were two severe scalp wounds, beneath which was discovered a fracture of the outer shell of the skull, and a cut and confused wound on the right temple. They apparently had been inflicted by some blunt instrument. The testimony as to there being no water in the bronchial tubes, lungs or stomach of Bruce, indicated that either death or insensibility had preceded submersion of the body.

Dr. Virden, associated with Dr. Dakin in the post mortem, corroborated strongly the evidence of the surgeon. In his opinion the man had either been dead or stunned before submersion, and the wounds had been inflicted with some implement wielded with force.

It is understood that the adjournment is at the request of the provincial officer backed by Mr. Secord.

Meantime, "Coon" Gerrard, the man on whom Bruce's watch was found, is being held on the nominal charge of larceny. Wm. Spain, a witness in the case, is understood to have a story varying from that told by Gerrard in accounting for the possession of the watch. Several witnesses have spoken freely, two of them being young men whom "Coon" Gerrard requested to come with him and help keep a "drunk" from falling into the hands of the police. This was about seven p.m. on Saturday. The "drunk" was James Bruce, and he was taken to the hospital.

PIPE KILLS BABY.

Papa's Old Meerschmum Non Plaything
For Infant.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., June 17.—A discarded pipe was given as a plaything to a child here yesterday, and an hour later he was dead of nicotine poisoning.

The victim was Harold, aged 2, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Thorn-field of New York, who had been spending a few days with Mrs.
Thornfield's brother, Harry A. November. While the two wives were rummaging among keepsakes in the attic an old meerschmum pipe was found. Little Harold cried for it, and the mother, having no suspicion of danger, gave it.

Sitting on the floor and clapping his hands, the child imitated his father, inserting the pipe in his mouth and puffing out imaginary smoke. Within ten minutes he toppled over in convulsions, which shortly gave way to coma.

TORONTO, June 17.—Shout: from cries of distress, lured Harmadous afternoon. Bent on rescuing his chum, whom he thought was drowning the young man plunged into the water, and calling out, "I am coming," sank.

The chum, not understanding L'Archeveque's words, swam out a little farther. Realizing then that he alone was above the surface, he reached shore and secured assistance. Although the body was recovered within 30 minutes, artificial respiration methods were applied in vain.

SESSION OF BLUNDERS

INCREASED BURDEN FOR TAXPAYERS AND ATTEMPT OF GOVERNMENT TO USURP AUTOCRATIC POWER.

In many respects the session of Parliament just closed has been the most remarkable since Confederation; unfortunately the remarkable features have been remarkably bad. First there was an obstinate struggle for government by Cabinet as against government by Parliament such as has not been witnessed in Canada since the bad days of the Family Compact. There was, for the first time in Canada, a government resolutely holding to office in face of the fact that its main propositions were refused by Parliament, and the satisfied acquiescence of the people in this refusal. The session witnessed the greatest revenues from taxation this country has ever known, and the least efforts on the part of the government to reduce the taxation burden of the people in face of a severe and growing tightness of the money market. With the cost of living rising beyond all precedent and the national income skyrocketing in the same way not a move was made by the government to aid the ordinary wage and salary earners who pay the taxes which supply this income.

The session witnessed an immense present out of the pockets of the taxpayers to the Canadian Northern and the Ontario Government railway and a huge loan to the Grand Trunk. At the same time the government refused to make any provisions for equalization of freight rates east and west, even when the demand was made by Mr. W. E. Maclean, a leading Conservative front benchers.

For six and a half months the Government attempted to drive its measures through Parliament by main force, refusing advice or amendment from the Opposition, and when met with anything like determined opposition introducing the closure—changing the rules in the midst of the fight. It has witnessed the leader of the Government threatening the Senate with extinction if it dared cross his will; it has seen this same Senate treat such threats with the contempt they deserved and deal with the legislation placed before it as statesmen should. It has seen the government kill measures of great importance rather than accept the slightest amendment which should deprive it of the handling of funds it wanted to use for election manipulation. It has witnessed the greatest waste of time and the most complete exhibition of

WHAT THE SENATE DID.

Upper Chamber Has Protected The People Against an Autocratic Government.

During the Session of Parliament just ended the Senate has proved its usefulness more than ever before. While fulminating against the Upper Chamber, Mr. Borden, has gone to extraordinary pains to give it opportunity to show how it can protect the people from the aggressions of Toryism. This is what the Senate did:

It prevented the Borden Government from sending a naval call loan of $35,000,000 to Great Britain without securing authority therefore from the people.

It prevented the Borden Government from securing to itself $1,250,000 to be used as electioneering funds under the guise of Aid to Highways, and put the government in the position of refusing to grant this money because it could not handle it itself.

It prevented the Government from arrogating to itself the power to build railways from 25 to 100 miles in length without a vote of the money by Parliament. Had the government secured this power it could have expended many millions every year without being subject to control of the people by their parliamentary representatives. What that would mean was shown at the Richelieu by-election, when the government tried to bribe the whole constituency with a promise of a railway if it voted right.

WHERE CANADIAN NAVY IS NEEDED

In a recent issue the TORONTO MAIL AND EMPIRE points out that Canada's richest coal deposits are on its Atlantic and Pacific coasts, exposed in case of war to immediate attack.

In such event any enemy could easily take these coal stations, and so prevent Canada, or Great Britain from using this coal, while at the same time using it for hostile fleets. The Tory organ declares: "These ports ought not to be left in an exposed state." The same Tory organ violently opposes the Laurier policy of strong local defence fleets which would provide just the defence these coaling ports require. It is hard for supporters of Mr. Borden to even pretend at consistency.

EVIDENCE OF INSINCERITY.

Government More Anxious To Handle Money Than Aid Empire.

Sir George Ross in his speech on the Naval Bill pointed out that everything provided by the Borden $35,000,000 contribution bill could be done under the Laurier Naval Bill of 1910, and more, with the difference that the money would be spent under Parliamentary control instead of being turned over in a lump for the government

NOBEL PRIZES.

Works That Win Them and the Way the Awards Are Made.

The Swedish scientist Alfred B. Nobel, the inventor of dynamite, died in 1896, bequeathing his fortune, estimated at $9,000,000, to the founding of a fund the interest of which should yearly be distributed to those who had mostly contributed to "the good of humanity." The interest is divided in five equal shares, given away:

"One to the person who in the domain of physics has made the most important discovery or invention, one to the person who has made the most important chemical discovery or invention, one to the person who has made the most important discovery in the domain of medicine or physiology, one to the person who in literature has provided the most excellent work of an idealistic tendency and one to the person who has worked most or best for the fraternization of nations and the abolition or reduction of standing armies and the calling in and propagating of peace congresses."

The prizes for physics and chemistry are awarded by the Swedish Academy of Science, that for physiological or medical work by the Caroline Institute (the faculty of medicine in Stockholm), that for literature by the Swedish Academy in Stockholm, and the peace prize is awarded by a committee of five persons elected by the Norwegian storting.

In accordance with these statutes the awarders of the prizes (the four above named institutions) elect fifteen deputies for two consecutive years, the Academy of Science electing six and the other prize awarders three each. These deputies elect for two consecutive years four members of the board of directors of the Nobel Institute, which board, exclusively consisting of Swedes, must reside in Stockholm. A fifth member, the president of the board, is nominated by the government.

The board of directors has in its care the funds of the institution and hands yearly over to the awarders of the prizes the amount to be given away. The value of each prize is on an average $40,000. The distribution of the prizes takes place every year on Dec. 10, the anniversary of Mr. Nobel's death.—Philadelphia Press.

AULD FOOLS' GAMBOL.

The Custom From Which All Fools' Day Takes Its Name.

Most people call April 1 all fools' day, whereas it should be auld—i. e., old fools' day. The appellation probably takes its origin from the following superstition:

In druidical times, between 10 and 12 o'clock on the night of April 1, it was customary for all those young women who dared to venture into a sacred grove and to take their stand one behind the other.

At the hooting of an owl they commenced slowly running round and round, to the accompaniment of such words as these:

Ban-man, ban-man,
From berg, bach and ley,
Leap high, leap low,
Come and run with me.

Thereupon, side by side with those of the girls destined to be married within the coming year, the phantom of a ban, or white man, appeared, and if any of the girls were going to die within the year a black man was seen.

WHIRL OF THE TORN

Beside It the Rush of the Cy.
Comparatively Harmless

An uphill fight for accurate is being waged year after year by scientific authorities on the weather object to having the tornadoes rip through towns now and carry away isolated farmhouses and "cyclones." The distinction by the experts in meteorology is but the public is wedded to the clone.

The word has gained wideance in describing the furious storms which rush forward a more or less direct path while whirl with far greater velocity center which may be only a few diameter. If a boy's top is s one end of a board and the b tilted so that the top slides along it, all the while revolv high speed on its point, the sweep of the tornado is close tated.

It is the spinning motion w swiftest and most destructive. vance of the storm may not be a as that of many a comparatively less gale. The twisting motion mated at not less than 200 m with extinction if it dared cross this will; it has seen this same Senate treat such threats with the contempt they deserved and deal with the legislation placed before it as statesmen should. It has seen the government kill measures of great importance rather than accept the slightest amendment which should deprive it of the handling of funds it wanted to use for election manipulation. It has witnessed the greatest waste of time and the most complete exhibition of weak government since the defeat of the Tupper government in 1896. Worst of all it has seen a Prime Minister of Canada whose word was publicly impugned in parliament as unreliable, and who was guilty of insinuations against the leader of the Opposition which were more contemptible than any courageous lie could have been.

BRILLIANT OPPOSITION VICTORY.

Judged by what it has achieved the session must be regarded as a signal failure; judged by what it has been prevented from doing it must be regarded as a brilliant Opposition victory. Every attempt to curtail the liberties of Parliament or people met steady opposition which was only overcome by gross abuse of the authority of the Speaker and Chairman, and with the closure. Fortunately the Senate, unawed by Borden's threats, rejected or amended the worst attempts on the constitutional rights of the people.

In this way the Naval Aid Bill was referred by the Senate to the people, and killed by the Government rather than face such an alternative. Senator Ross pointed out that if Mr. Borden wanted to do anything for the immediate aid of the British Navy he could do more under the Laurier Naval Act of 1910 than under his own tribute proposal, and could include in the estimates ten or fifteen million dollars, to be expended by Parliament. Mr. Borden refused to do this. He would either get the $35,000,000 to be expended by the Cabinet or do nothing, and he has delighted his Nationalist allies by doing nothing.

THE HIGHWAYS AID BILL.

With characteristic stubbornness Mr. Borden again presented the Highways Aid Bill with all its original objectionable features of centralization and spending of money by the cabinet for its own ends. It was once again amended by the Senate, and again the government refused the amendment, declining to spend this $1,250,000 on good roads unless allowed to spend the money itself or dictate its expenditure in Provinces controlled by the Liberal governments. The Liberals and the Senate demanded that this money be given the Provinces to be spent in a constitutional way; the government refused to grant the money unless it secured control of the fund for unconstitutional and corrupt purposes. The country is the loser by this application of the Rogers system of finance.

EVIDENCE OF INSICURITY Government More Anxious To Handle Money Than Aid Empire.

Sir George Ross in his speech on the Naval Bill pointed out that everything provided by the Borden $35,000,000 contribution bill could be done under the Laurier Naval Bill of 1910, and more, with the difference that the money would be spent under Parliamentary control instead of being turned over in a lump for the government to handle at its own will. Had Mr. Borden been sincere when he made his hysterical appeal for protection against the thunder he heard and the lightning he saw on the horizon he would have provided for a vote of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 in the estimate for naval construction when his pet bill was referred to the people by the Senate. He refused to do this. Was he more interested in securing the "unearned increment" from handling this $35,000,000 than aiding the Empire?

Profligate Spendthrifts.

The wealth of many of the ancient Romans was reckoned far into the millions. Mark Antony during his somewhat checkered career squandered no less than $735,000,000, and Tiberius left at his death over $18,000,000, which Caligula spent in less than a year. Records show that this spendthrift paid $150,000 for one supper. Horace tells us that Pegellus, a singer, could in five days spend $40,000, and Coddius on a small wager swallowed a pearl worth nearly $40,000. The estate of Crassus was valued at $3,400,000. Lucullus dined at the rate of $8,000 a meal for several weeks, and Apicius squandered nearly $5,000,000 in a few weeks.

How to Start a Fortune.

Save a little every week, and when you get an increase of wages or salary continue to live within the former limits and save the increase. If you find it difficult to save go in debt for a home or undertake some other obligation in the way of investment that will compel you to save. In these days, of course, the average man has better opportunities to win success in salaried positions than in individual enterprises. The big enterprises pay big salaries at the top, and close application will win promotion toward these bigger rewards. It is not necessary for a man to get a big salary before he begins to put money aside.

Farming Under Water.

Farming under forty feet of water would seem to be a rather difficult work. It is a difficult and expensive work, but it is done upon a vast scale, as there are farms under forty, fifty and even sixty feet of salt water to the extent of more than 20,000 acres under a single management. These farms, while they are as extensive as the vast grainfields of the west, do not produce grain, but they produce oysters. The crop is propagated, seeded, planted, protected, removed, replanted, matured and harvested all by steam power, large steamers being employed in gathering the oyster crops from these grounds.

Forgot His Own Name.

One of the most distinguished orators of the House of Lords confesses that he once forgot his real name. Lord Rathmore, who was raised to the peerage in 1895, has no doubt become accustomed to the title by now. In the early days of his grandeur, however, he was nonplussed when a French railway official suddenly required his name. He could remember that he used to be called Plunket, but had to consult his card case in order to learn his new designation.—London Chronicle.

Thereupon, side by side with those of the girls destined to be married within the coming year, the phantom of a ban, or white man, appeared, and if any of the girls were going to die within the year a black man was seen. Once while this ceremony was in progress the spirit of a very old, tottering white man put in an appearance and exhibited such emphatic attention to the girl he ran with that the other performers were much amused.

The object of their amusement was subsequently chafed to such an extent by every one in the village that she fled from the neighborhood, marrying before the year was out a strange chieftain old enough to be her grandfather.

After this event the ceremony was ironically styled the "aud fools' gambol."—London Answers.

Dead Sea Stillness.

The Dead sea is a vast lake about nine hours' ride from Jerusalem. The waters of the lake, save for an almost imperceptible ripple, are quite still and tolerably transparent, but salt and "bitter beyond bitterness" and so buoyant that one can float upon them like a cork, and to swim it is only necessary to move the hands. The surrounding scenery is dreary in the extreme and in parts singularly grand. But the stillness is oppressive and depressing, for there is no sound of animal life or song of bird ever heard on the lonely shores of the famous lake.

Shelley and the Kiss.

The supreme laureate of the kiss is Shelley. The word is seldom absent from his shorter lyrics. Here is one stanza laden with kisses:

See the mountains kiss high heaven
And the waves clasp one another.
No sister flower would be forgiven
If it disdained its brother.
And the sunlight clasps the earth,
And the moonbeams kiss the sea.
What are all those kissings worth
If thou kiss not me?

As She Saw It.

The handsome hospital nurse who married an old wealthy man the other day was very happy in her reply to a friend who asked why she wedded such a fossil.

"I thought I might as well be engaged in nursing one old man as a dozen."

THE TOMB OF JONAH

Said to Be In a Mosque Adj. to Site of Nineveh.

The site of Nineveh is almost perfectly level. But adjoining the wall are two huge mounds containing the palaces of the greatest kings of Assyria. The lower or southern mound is occupied by a mosque and a of considerable size. Its name Yunus, or the Prophet Jonah, the mosque is the tomb in which is said to have been buried. The date of the tomb is uncertain, yet it dates from long after the prophet's time. However, the tomb is now sacred, so sacred that it is visited from afar.

I rode up the steep, narrow of the village to the mosque, the amazement of the natives mounted and entered the mosque. A crowd of excited men quickly surrounded me. To a priest I explained that I had come to see the tomb of Jonah, and with a motion of the hand I made it understood that he rewarded. Removing my shoe I followed the priest through a dark sageway. There he pointed to and said that the tomb was beyond. I wished to enter the room from which the tomb itself be seen, but the place was so far too sacred for my profane intrusion.

However, the few Christians have been permitted to see the tomb may look only through a small window into a dark chamber in which covered mound is scarcely discernible. It is said that no Moslem ever enters the inner shrine.—Christianity.

AFRICAN CORONATIONS.

Choice of a King In Dark Continent
Is a Violent Ceremony.

The customs of savage people make up in curious picturesqueness what they lack in dignity. Contrast, for instance, the ceremonial that Mr. Robert M. Milligan describes in "The Fetish Folk of West Africa," with the coronation of a British king.

The king was chosen from among the people by the elders, and he was selected for his wisdom. The ceremonies of his enthronement were such that he required not only wisdom, but also courage, physical strength, and a superb digestion. The man's first intimation that he had been chosen by the elders was an onrush of the entire tribe—not to do him honor, but to abuse and insult him in every possible way.

They would hurl opprobrious epithets at him, curse him, spit upon him, pelt him with mud, and beat him. For, they said, from this time on he could do all these things to them, and they would be powerless to retaliate. It was their last chance!

They also reminded him of all his failings in graphic and minute particulars. If the king survived this treatment, he was then taken to the former king's house, where he was solemnly invested with the insignia of the kingly office in the shape of a silk hat. No one except the king was permitted to wear a silk hat.

Following the inauguration ceremony, the people came and bowed before the new king in humble submission, while they praised him as enthusiastically as they had before reviled him. Then he was fed and feted for a week, during which time he was not permitted to leave his house, but had to receive guests from all parts of his dominion, and eat with them all. These ceremonies ended, he turned to the comparatively easy and common-place duties of his kingly office. This custom, like many others, has passed away under the influence of civilization.

Wireless Alarm Calls.

One of the great difficulties in wireless telegraphy—the need of constant attention in a wireless station day and night in case of a possible call—will probably be eliminated soon. To-day if an operator goes to sleep at his post or takes a rest with his telephone receiver laid aside he may miss an important call. So wireless engineers all over the world have been working to devise a call system that will ring an alarm when another station is sending a message. Several are now being perfected, including one by Marconi, which he expects will be satisfactory. His plan is to have the sending station send one prolonged signal or dash much longer than the dots and dashes used in telegraphing. At the receiving station a delicate galvanometer detects the current, and in the case of a prolonged dash this galvanometer starts an electric bell ringing. The real difficulty is to overcome false alarms from atmospheric discharges of electricity. An operator quickly learns to tell by the sound what is a real call and what is a false one, but it has proved difficult to make a machine show equal discrimination.

Late Comers Make Life a Misery Says Londoner.

When Mr. Bernard Shaw lately appealed to an audience not to applaud during the performance of "John Bull's Other Island," the bulk of those to whom the appeal was addressed treated it as, one of Mr. Shaw's jokes.

That appeal, however, says a writer in The London Daily Mail, was not only made in seriousness but it was made with reason. There cannot be any doubt about the fact that playgoers, particularly those who seat themselves in the stalls and dress circle, are a mannerless lot. Why ladies and gentlemen, extremely courteous over the ordinary usages of life, should become graceless in the theatre is one of those things which are difficult to understand.

The latecomer we have always with us, and I suppose nothing will induce that individual to amend his ways; but I suggest that the theatre managers might very well make it a rule that those who enter the house after the curtain rises should either be compelled to cool their heels in the corridors until it falls at the end of the particular act or be requested to stand at the side of the theatre until the interval. Probably the latter course would be the preferable one to follow, since many

MISALLIANCES.

Romances of Royalty Who Have Married Peasants.

King and peasant, Empress and scullerymaid have this common link of humanity, that all are equally plastic clay in the hands of that automatic modeller of destiny, Cupid, to whom a royal palace is no more sacred than a mud hovel. Thus we find at his bidding the great "Sun-King," Louis XIV., leading to the altar Scaron's plain-featured, middle-aged widow to crown his later years with happiness; and Elizabeth, of Russia, offering her hand to Alexis Razoum, the peasant's son.

And so it has often been in the stories of kings. Royal brides of high lineage may have called them husband, but it is in the Consort of low degree that their hearts have found the only wedded happiness they knew—such happiness as Martha, the Livonian maid-of-all-work, brought to Peter the Great when he made her wife, or as Christian II., of Denmark, found in Dyveke, his "little dove"—the maid of the Bergen fruitstall.

Even in recent years Leopold, King of the Belgians, proved, after he had passed into the seventies, how frail a monarch may be at the bidding of Cupid, when he stood at the altar with Madame Vaughan, daughter of a Louvain apothecary, who was to become knew—such happiness as Martha, the Livonian maid-of-all-work, brought to Peter the Great when he made her wife, or as Christian II., of Denmark, found in Dyveke, his "little dove"—the maid of the Bergen fruitstall.

Even in recent years Leopold, King of the Belgians, proved, after he had passed into the seventies, how frail a monarch may be at the bidding of Cupid, when he stood at the altar with Madame Vaughan, daughter of a Louvain caretaker, who was to become mother of his children.

Our own royal records, too, are full of such morganatic romances. Was not our fourth William the devoted husband of Mrs. Jordan, and through her the founder of the noble family of Munster? The Duke of Sussex, William's brother, had two such "left-handed" wives—Lady Augusta Murray and Lady Cecilia Gore, whose first husband was a "Buggin'" and who is described as "very small and common-looking and very ridiculous by the side of her magnificent duke."

Miss Fairbrother, actress, was the much-loved wife of the late Duke of Cambridge and mother of his children; and the late Duke of Teck and Prince Henry of Battenberg were both the offspring of morganatic marriages, with mothers born "out of the purple."

What a world of romance there is in these morganatic unions, which have all the sanction and binding of the church, but which confer no royal rank on the non-royal partner or her offspring. There is no sovereign in Europe who cannot point to such romances in his own family.

Among the Archdukes of Austria, John found a wife in the daughter of a way side publican, a young lady who donned the uniform of a postillion to drive the prince's chaise when no male postillion was available, and thus won his heart and hand. Archduke Johann Salvator (known to fame and mystery as "Johann Orth") put a wedding ring on the finger of Fraulein Stubel, the dancing girl, with whom he set sail across the Atlantic, never to be heard of again to this day. And Archduke Ernest made a morganatic wife of a girl of the ballet, and became father of a son who is said to be acting as head waiter in a Buda-Pesth cafe.

The Archduke Henry lost his heart and freedom to Leopoldine Hoffman, a "star" of the Vienna stage, and was sent into exile for seven years for his folly. Francis Ferdinand, the Emperor's nephew and heir, is ideally happy with his unroyal wife, Sophie Chotek and her three children, who can never share his rank even when he in turn wears the crown of Austria-Hungary; and for love of Mademoiselle Adamovics, a pretty singer, the Archduke Leopold Ferdinand was glad to lay aside his royal trappings, and as "Herr Wolfing," to lead the simple life in Switzerland with the woman of his choice.

Like the Hapsburgs, the Hohenzollerns have many such romantic alliances in their records. Prince Joachim Albrecht, and Prince Augustus of Prussia, both had actresses for brides; and Prince Adalbert, brother of the late Queen of Bavaria, has as morganatic wife, Terese Elser, a gifted dancer of her day.

In a Quandary.

A charming hostess who was entertaining a party of children discovered one little fellow sitting in a corner apparently lost in thought.

"What are you thinking about, Harry?"

us, and I suppose nothing will induce that individual to amend his ways; but I suggest that the theatre managers might very well make it a rule that those who enter the house after the curtain rises should either be compelled to cool their heels in the corridors until it falls at the end of the particular act or be requested to stand at the side of the theatre until the interval. Probably, the latter course would be the preferable one to follow, since many playgoers are made late by their train service. But some such course must be taken if playgoing is to have any attraction at all.

When Mr. Forbes-Robertson began his farewell season recently at Drury Lane, London, with the production of "Hamlet," this nuisance of the late-comer became even more pronounced than usual, for the first scene of the play, in which the air of mystery and tragic destiny is created, was totally ruined by attendants, armed with electric lamps, showing ladies and gentlemen to their seats. How is it possible for one to feel the thrill of the supernatural at the appearance of the ghost of Hamlet's father when a charming lady treads on your toes as she seeks her seat? How can you realize the terror of the sentinels and Horatio at the sight of the spectre when someone is whispering "Sorry!" in your ear as he presses past you? Or feel the eeriness of Elsinore when there is a continual banging of seats all over the theatre? While Mr. Grendon Bentley was speaking "Mr. Shaw's Prologue to "Caesar and Cleopatra" there was a regular cannonade of banged seats, so that much of the finely phrased speech was lost, and this disturbance continued well into the middle of the first scene.

Getting at the Truth.

Was he rich, or was he poor? She wanted very much to know before giving him an answer to the momentous question. So, after thinking deeply for a minute, "I'm afraid we shouldn't get along very well," she said. "You are too extravagant."

"Extravagant!" he repeated. "On the contrary, I'm very economical. I have to be," he added as an afterthought.

"Then I can never consent to be your wife."

"Because I'm economical?" he gasped, astonished at her logic.

"No," she replied, "but because you have to be."

Exorcising Disease.

Very curious methods were employed by the ancient Babylonians to exorcise disease. The sucking pig and kid played an important part in the remedies. The pig or kid was to be killed, cut up and placed upon the sick man. The heart of the pig, which had been placed upon the sick man's heart, was to be held by him, and the pig's heart was to be as his heart, the blood as his blood, the flash as his flesh, and the pig was to be in his stead. The kid was dealt with in the same way, being placed upon the sick man.

Medical Case.

A young doctor said to a girl, "Do you know, dear, I have a heart affection for you?"

"Have you had it lung?" she coyly inquired.

"Oh, yes; I feel that I will liver troubled life without you!" he fervently responded.

"Then you had better asthma," she softly murmured.

us, and I suppose nothing will induce that individual to amend his ways; but I suggest that the theatre managers might very well make it a rule that those who enter the house after the curtain rises should either be compelled to cool their heels in the corridors until it falls at the end of the particular act or be requested to stand at the side of the theatre until the interval. Probably, the latter course would be the preferable one to follow, since many playgoers are made late by their train service. But some such course must be taken if playgoing is to have any attraction at all.

When Mr. Forbes-Robertson began his farewell season recently at Drury Lane, London, with the production of "Hamlet," this nuisance of the late-comer became even more pronounced than usual, for the first scene of the play, in which the air of mystery and tragic destiny is created, was totally ruined by attendants, armed with electric lamps, showing ladies and gentlemen to their seats. How is it possible for one to feel the thrill of the supernatural at the appearance of the ghost of Hamlet's father when a charming lady treads on your toes as she seeks her seat? How can you realize the terror of the sentinels and Horatio at the sight of the spectre when someone is whispering "Sorry!" in your ear as he presses past you? Or feel the eeriness of Elsinore when there is a continual banging of seats all over the theatre? While Mr. Grendon Bentley was speaking "Mr. Shaw's Prologue to "Caesar and Cleopatra" there was a regular cannonade of banged seats, so that much of the finely phrased speech was lost, and this disturbance continued well into the middle of the first scene.

It is obvious that conduct of this kind is destructive of the atmosphere of illusion which is essential to the performance of any play, and it is grossly unfair not only to the players, whose work is being ruined, but also to those members of the audience who have had the common civility to arrive at the theatre in time.

But the nuisance of the latecomer is not the only trouble in the theatre. There has lately been an epidemic of distressing coughs among playgoers. At the first performance of "Open Windows" there was an incessant barking during the whole of the first act and frequently during the remainder of the performance. At one moment six gentlemen coughed simultaneously, and it seemed to me that they coughed as loudly as they could.

The ventilation of the theatre is generally faulty, but I am certain that a great deal of the coughing that goes on in playhouses is unnecessary; at all events, it cannot be essential that the cough should be as noisy as possible, I am not aware that the ventilation of an opera house is any better than the ventilation of a theatre, but I do know that an audience of music-lovers would not tolerate the coughing that is patiently endured by playgoers.

Couldn't Move Her.

A story is told by a well-known divine of another divine, who preached a very eloquent sermon, some of the congregation being so deeply affected as to shed tears. One old lady, however, sat bolt upright, apparently untouched by the clergyman's eloquence. Rather annoyed at such irresponsiveness, the preacher's wife approached the lady referred to. "Excuse me, madam," she said, "but I remark that you didn't seem much affected by the sermon, though everybody else was?" "No," replied the old lady. "It didn't affect me because he is not really my clergyman. You see, I don't belong to this parish!"

SESSION OF BLUNDERS

INCREASED BURDEN FOR TAXPAYERS AND ATTEMPT OF GOVERNMENT TO URGENT AUTOCRATIC POWER.

In many respects the session of Parliament just closed has been the most remarkable since Confederation; unfortunately the remarkable features have been remarkably bad. First there was an obstinate struggle for government by Cabinet as against government by Parliament such as has not been witnessed in Canada since the bad days of the Family Compact. There was, for the first time in Canada, a government resolutely holding to office in face of the fact that its main propositions were refused by Parliament, and the satisfied acquiescence of the people in this refusal. The session witnessed the greatest revenues from taxation this country has ever known, and the least efforts on the part of the government to reduce the taxation burden of the people in face of a severe and growing tightness of the money market. With the cost of living rising beyond all precedent and the national income skyrocketing in the same way not a move was made by the government to aid the ordinary wage and salary earners who pay the taxes which supply this income.

The session witnessed an immense present out of the pockets of the taxpayers to the Canadian Northern and the Ontario Government railway and a huge loan to the Grand Trunk. At the same time the government refused to make any provisions for equalization of freight rates east and west, even when the demand was made by Mr. W. F. Maclean, a leading Conservative front benchers.

For six and a half months the Government attempted to drive its measures through Parliament by main force, refusing advice or amendment from the Opposition, and when met with anything like determined opposition introducing the closure—changing the rules in the midst of the fight. It has witnessed the leader of the Government threatening the Senate with extinction if it dared cross his will; it has seen this same Senate treat such threats with the contempt they deserved and deal with the legislation placed before it as statesmen should. It has seen the government kill measures of great importance rather than accept the slightest amendment which should deprive it of the handling of funds it wanted to use for election manipulation. It has witnessed the greatest waste of time and the most complete exhibition of

WHAT THE SENATE DID.

Upper Chamber Has Protected The People Against an Autocratic Government.

During the Session of Parliament just ended the Senate has proved its usefulness more than ever before. While fulminating against the Upper Chamber, Mr. Borden has gone to extraordinary pains to give it opportunity to show how it can protect the people from the aggressions of Toryism. This is what the Senate did:

It prevented the Borden Government from sending a naval call loan of $35,000,000 to Great Britain without securing authority therefore from the people.

It prevented the Borden Government from securing to itself $1,250,000 to be used as electioneering funds under the guise of Aid to Highways, and put the government in the position of refusing to grant this money because it could not handle it itself.

It prevented the Government from arrogating to itself the power to build railways from 25 to 100 miles in length without a vote of the money by Parliament. Had the government secured this power it could have expended many millions every year without being subject to control of the people by their parliamentary representatives. What that would mean was shown at the Richelieu by-election, when the government tried to bribe the whole constituency with a promise of a railway if it voted right.

WHERE CANADIAN NAVY IS NEEDED

In a recent issue the TORONTO MAIL AND EMPIRE points out that Canada's richest coal deposits are on its Atlantic and Pacific coasts, exposed in case of war to immediate attack.

In such event any enemy could easily take these coal stations, and so prevent Canada, or Great Britain from using this coal, while at the same time using it for hostile fleets. The Tory organ declares: "These ports ought not to be left in an exposed state." The same Tory organ violently opposes the Laurier policy of strong local defence fleets which would provide just the defence these coaling ports require. It is hard for supporters of Mr. Borden to even pretend at consistency.

EVIDENCE OF INSINCERITY.

Government More Anxious To Handle Money Than Aid Empire.

Sir George Ross in his speech on the Naval Bill pointed out that everything provided by the Borden $35,000,000 contribution bill could be done under the Laurier Naval Bill of 1910, and more, with the difference that the money would be spent under Parliamentary control instead of being turned over in a lump for the government

NOBEL PRIZES.

Works That Win Them and the Way the Awards Are Made.

The Swedish scientist Alfred B. Nobel, the inventor of dynamite, died in 1896, bequeathing his fortune, estimated at $9,000,000, to the founding of a fund the interest of which should yearly be distributed to those who had mostly contributed to "the good of humanity." The interest is divided in five equal shares, given away:

"One to the person who in the domain of physics has made the most important discovery or invention, one to the person who has made the most important chemical discovery or invention, one to the person who has made the most important discovery in the domain of medicine or physiology, one to the person who in literature has provided the most excellent work of an idealistic tendency and one to the person who has worked most or best for the fraternization of nations and the abolition or reduction of standing armies and the calling in and propagating of peace congresses."

The prizes for physics and chemistry are awarded by the Swedish Academy of Science, that for physiological or medical work by the Caroline Institute (the faculty of medicine in Stockholm), that for literature by the Swedish Academy in Stockholm, and the peace prize is awarded by a committee of five persons elected by the Norwegian storting.

In accordance with these statutes the awarders of the prizes (the four above named institutions) elect fifteen deputies for two consecutive years, the Academy of Science electing six and the other prize awarders three each. These deputies elect for two consecutive years four members of the board of directors of the Nobel Institute, which board, exclusively consisting of Swedes, must reside in Stockholm. A fifth member, the president of the board, is nominated by the government.

The board of directors has in its care the funds of the institution and hands yearly over to the awarders of the prizes the amount to be given away. The value of each prize is on an average $40,000. The distribution of the prizes takes place every year on Dec. 10, the anniversary of Mr. Nobel's death.—Philadelphia Press.

AULD FOOLS' GAMBOL.

The Custom From Which All Fools' Day Takes Its Name.

Most people call April 1 all fools' day, whereas it should be auld—i. e., old fools' day. The appellation probably takes its origin from the following superstition:

In druidical times, between 10 and 12 o'clock on the night of April 1, it was customary for all those young women who dared to venture into a sacred grove and to take their stand one behind the other.

At the hooting of an owl they commenced slowly running round and round, to the accompaniment of such words as these:

Ban-man, ban-man,
From berg, bach and ley,
Leap high, leap low,
Come and run with me.

Thereupon, side by side with those of the girls destined to be married within the coming year, the phantom of a ban, or white man, appeared, and if any of the girls were going to die within the year a black man was seen.

WHIRL OF THE TORNADO

Beside It the Rush of the Cyclone Comparatively Harmless.

An uphill fight for accurate scientific authorities on the weather object to having the tornadoes rip through towns now and then carry away isolated farmhouses and "cyclones." The distinction by the experts in meteorology is but the public is wedded to the clone.

The word has gained wide currency in describing the furious storms which rush forward along more or less direct path while whirl with far greater velocity center which may be only a few feet in diameter. If a boy's top is spun on one end of a board and the board tilted so that the top slides along it, all the while revolving high speed on its point, the swirl of the tornado is closely imitated.

It is the spinning motion with the swiftest and most destructive. The force of the storm may not be as great as that of many a comparatively less gale. The twisting motion is estimated at not less than 200 miles will; it has seen this same Senate treat such threats with the contempt they deserved and deal with the legislation placed before it as statesmen should. It has seen the government kill measures of great importance rather than accept the slightest amendment which should deprive it of the handling of funds it wanted to use for election manipulation. It has witnessed the greatest waste of time and the most complete exhibition of weak government since the defeat of the Tupper government in 1896. Worst of all it has seen a Prime Minister of Canada whose word was publicly impugned in parliament as unreliable, and who was guilty of insinuations against the leader of the Opposition which were more contemptible than any courageous lie could have been.

BRILLIANT OPPOSITION VICTORY.

Judged by what it has achieved the session must be regarded as a signal failure; judged by what it has been prevented from doing it must be regarded as a brilliant Opposition victory. Every attempt to curtail the liberties of Parliament or people met steady opposition which was only overcome by gross abuse of the authority of the Speaker and Chairman, and with the closure. Fortunately the Senate, unawed by Borden's threats, rejected or amended the worst attempts on the constitutional rights of the people.

In this way the Naval Aid Bill was referred by the Senate to the people, and killed by the Government rather than face such an alternative. Senator Ross pointed out that if Mr. Borden wanted to do anything for the immediate aid of the British Navy he could do more under the Laurier Naval Act of 1910 than under his own tribute proposal, and could include in the estimates ten or fifteen million dollars, to be expended by Parliament. Mr. Borden refused to do this. He would either get the $35,000,000 to be expended by the Cabinet or do nothing, and he has delighted his Nationalist allies by doing nothing.

THE HIGHWAYS' AID BILL.

With characteristic stubbornness Mr. Borden again presented the Highways Aid Bill with all its original objectionable features of centralization and spending of money by the cabinet for its own ends. It was once again amended by the Senate, and again the government refused the amendment, declining to spend this $1,250,000 on good roads unless allowed to spend the money itself or dictate its expenditure in Provinces controlled by the Liberal governments. The Liberals and the Senate demanded that this money be given the Provinces to be spent in a constitutional way; the government refused to grant the money unless it secured control of the fund for unconstitutional and corrupt purposes. The country is the loser by this application of the Rogers system of finance.

EVIDENCE OF INSINCERITY. Government More Anxious To Handle Money Than Aid Empire.

Sir George Ross in his speech on the Naval Bill pointed out that everything provided by the Borden $35,000,000 contribution bill could be done under the Laurier Naval Bill of 1910, and more, with the difference that the money would be spent under Parliamentary control instead of being turned over in a lump for the government to handle at its own will. Had Mr. Borden been sincere when he made his hysterical appeal for protection against the thunder he heard and the lightning he saw on the horizon he would have provided for a vote of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 in the estimate for naval construction when his pet bill was referred to the people by the Senate. He refused to do this. Was he more interested in securing the "unearned increment" from handling this $35,000,000 than aiding the Empire?

Profligate Spendthrifts.

The wealth of many of the ancient Romans was reckoned far into the millions. Mark Antony during his somewhat checkered career squandered no less than $735,000,000, and Tiberius left at his death over $18,000,000, which Caligula spent in less than a year. Records show that this spendthrift paid $150,000 for one supper. Horace tells us that Pegellus, a singer, could in five days spend $40,000, and Cadius on a small wager swallowed a pearl worth nearly $40,000. The estate of Crassus was valued at $8,400,000. Lucullus dined at the rate of $8,000 a meal for several weeks, and Apicius squandered nearly $5,000,000 in a few weeks.

How to Start a Fortune.

Save a little every week, and when you get an increase of wages or salary continue to live within the former limits and save the increase. If you find it difficult to save go in debt for a home or undertake some other obligation in the way of investment that will compel you to save. In these days, of course, the average man has better opportunities to win success in salaried positions than in individual enterprises. The big enterprises pay big salaries at the top, and close application will win promotion toward these bigger rewards. It is not necessary for a man to get a big salary before he begins to put money aside.

Farming Under Water.

Farming under forty feet of water would seem to be a rather difficult work. It is a difficult and expensive work, but it is done upon a vast scale, as there are farms under forty, fifty and even sixty feet of salt water to the extent of more than 20,000 acres under a single management. These farms, while they are as extensive as the vast grainfields of the west, do not produce grain, but they produce oysters. The crop is propagated, seeded, planted, protected, removed, replanted, matured and harvested all by steam power, large steamers being employed in gathering the oyster crops from these grounds.

Forgot His Own Name.

One of the most distinguished orators of the House of Lords confesses that he once forgot his real name. Lord Rathmore, who was raised to the peerage in 1895, has no doubt become accustomed to the title by now. In the early days of his grandeur, however, he was nonplussed when a French railway official suddenly required his name. He could remember that he used to be called Plunkett, but had to consult his card case in order to learn his new designation.—London Chronicle.

Thereupon, side by side with those of the girls destined to be married within the coming year, the phantom of a ban, or white man, appeared, and if any of the girls were going to die within the year a black man was seen.

Once while this ceremony was in progress the spirit of a very old, tottering white man put in an appearance and exhibited such emphatic attention to the girl he ran with that the other performers were much amused.

The object of their amusement was subsequently chaffed to such an extent by every one in the village that she fled from the neighborhood, marrying before the year was out a strange chieftain old enough to be her grandfather.

After this event the ceremony was ironically styled the "auld fool's gambol."—London Answers.

Dead Sea Stillness.

The Dead sea is a vast lake about nine hours' ride from Jerusalem. The waters of the lake, save for an almost imperceptible ripple, are quite still and tolerably transparent, but salt and "bitter beyond bitterness" and so buoyant that one can float upon them like a cork, and to swim it is only necessary to move the hands. The surrounding scenery is dreary in the extreme and in parts singularly grand. But the stillness is oppressive and depressing, for there is no sound of animal life or song of bird ever heard on the lonely shores of the famous lake.

Shelley and the Kiss.

The supreme laureate of the kiss is Shelley. The word is seldom absent from his shorter lyrics. Here is one stanza laden with kisses:

See the mountains kiss high heaven
And the waves clasp one another.
No sister flower would be forgiven
If it disdained its brother.
And the sunlight clasps the earth,
And the moonbeams kiss the sea.
What are all those kissings worth
If thou kiss not me?

AFRICAN CORONATIONS.

Choice of a King In Dark Continent
Is a Violent Ceremony.

The customs of savage people make up in curious picturesqueness what they lack in dignity. Contrast, for instance, the ceremonial that Mr. Robert M. Milligan describes in "The Fetish Folk of West Africa," with the coronation of a British king.

The king was chosen from among the people by the elders, and he was selected for his wisdom. The ceremonies of his enthronement were such that he required not only wisdom, but also courage, physical strength, and a superb digestion. The man's first intimation that he had been chosen by the elders was an onrush of the entire tribe—not to do him honor, but to abuse and insult him in every possible way.

They would hurl opprobrious epithets at him, curse him, spit upon him, pelt him with mud, and beat him. For, they said, from this time on he could do all these things to them, and they would be powerless to retaliate. It was their last chance!

They also reminded him of all his failings in graphic and minute particulars. If the king survived this treatment, he was then taken to the former king's house, where he was solemnly invested with the insignia of the kingly office in the shape of a silk hat. No one except the king was permitted to wear a silk hat.

Following the inauguration ceremony, the people came and bowed before the new king in humble submission, while they praised him as enthusiastically as they had before reviled him. Then he was fed and feted for a week, during which time he was not permitted to leave his house, but had to receive guests from all parts of his dominion, and eat with them all. These ceremonies ended, he turned to the comparatively easy and common-place duties of his kingly office. This custom, like many others, has passed away under the influence of civilization.

Wireless Alarm Calls.

One of the great difficulties in wireless telegraphy—the need of constant attention in a wireless station day and night in case of a possible call—will probably be eliminated soon. To-day if an operator goes to sleep at his post or takes a rest with his telephone receiver laid aside he may miss an important call. So wireless engineers all over the world have been working to devise a call system that will ring an alarm when another station is sending a message. Several are now being perfected, including one by Marconi, which he expects will be satisfactory. His plan is to have the sending station send one prolonged signal or dash much longer than the dots and dashes used in telegraphing. At the receiving station a delicate galvanometer detects the current, and in the case of a prolonged dash this galvanometer starts an electric bell ringing. The real difficulty is to overcome false alarms from atmospheric discharges of electricity. An operator quickly learns to tell by the sound what is a real call and what is a false one, but it has proved difficult to make a machine show equal discrimination.

MISALLIANCES.

Romances of Royalty Who Have Married Peasants.

King and peasant, Empress and scullerymaid have this common link of humanity, that all are equally plastic clay in the hands of that autocratic modeller of destiny, Cupid, to whom a royal palace is no more sacred than a mud hovel. Thus we find at his bidding the great "Sun-King," Louis XIV., leading to the altar Scaron's plain-featured, middle-aged widow to crown his later years with happiness; and Elizabeth, of Russia, offering her hand to Alexis Razoum, the peasant's son.

And so it has often been in the stories of kings. Royal brides of high lineage may have called them husband, but it is in the Consort of low degree that their hearts have found the only wedded happiness they knew—such happiness as Martha, the Livonian maid-of-all-work, brought to Peter the Great when he made her wife, or as Christian II., of Denmark, found in Dyveke, his "little dove"—the maid of the Bergen fruitstall.

Even in recent years Leopold, King of the Belgians, proved, after he had passed into the seventies, how frail a monarch may be at the bidding of Cupid, when he stood at the altar with Madame Vaughan, daughter of a

Late Comers Make Life a Misery Says Londoner.

When Mr. Bernard Shaw lately appeared to an audience not to applaud during the performance of "John Bull's Other Island," the bulk of those to whom the appeal was addressed treated it as one of Mr. Shaw's jokes.

That appeal, however, says a writer in The London Daily Mail, was not only made in seriousness but it was made with reason. There cannot be any doubt about the fact that playgoers, particularly those who seat themselves in the stalls and dress circle, are a mannerless lot. Why ladies and gentlemen, extremely courteous over the ordinary usages of life, should become graceless in the theatre is one of those things which are difficult to understand.

The latecomer we have always with us, and I suppose nothing will induce that individual to amend his ways; but I suggest that the theatre managers might very well make it a rule that those who enter the house after the curtain rises should either be compelled to cool their heels in the corridors until it falls at the end of the particular act or be requested to stand at the side of the theatre until the interval. Probably the latter course would be the preferable one to follow, since man-knew—such happiness as Martha, the Livonian maid-of-all-work, brought to Peter the Great when he made her wife, or as Christian II., of Denmark, found in Dyveke, his "little dove"—the maid of the Bergen fruitstall.

Even in recent years Leopold, King of the Belgians, proved, after he had passed into the seventies, how frail a monarch may be at the bidding of Cupid, when he stood at the altar with Madame Vaughan, daughter of a Louvain caretaker, who was to become mother of his children.

Our own royal records, too, are full of such morganatic romances. Was not our fourth William the devoted husband of Mrs. Jordan, and through her the founder of the noble family of Munster? The Duke of Sussex, William's brother, had two such "left-handed" wives—Lady Augusta Murray and Lady Cecelia Gore, whose first husband was a "Buggin," and who is described as "very small and common-looking and very ridiculous by the side of her magnificent duke.

Miss Fairbrother, actress, was the much-loved wife of the late Duke of Cambridge and mother of his children; and the late Duke of Teck and Prince Henry of Battenberg were both the offspring of morganatic marriages, with mothers born "out of the purple."

What a world of romance there is in these morganatic unions, which have all the sanction and binding of the church, but which confer no royal rank on the non-royal partner or her offspring. There is no sovereign in Europe who cannot point to such romances in his own family.

Among the Archdukes of Austria, John found a wife in the daughter of a way side publican, a young lady who donned the uniform of a postillion to drive the prince's chaise when no male postillion was available, and thus won his heart and hand. Archduke Johann Salvator (known to fame and mystery as "Johann Orth") put a wedding ring on the finger of Fraulein Stubel, the dancing girl, with whom he set sail across the Atlantic, never to be heard of again to this day. And Archduke Ernest made a morganatic wife of a girl of the ballet, and became father of a son who is said to be acting as head waiter in a Buda-Pesth cafe.

The Archduke Henry lost his heart and freedom to Leopoldine Hoffman, a "star" of the Vienna stage, and was sent into exile for seven years for his folly. Francis Ferdinand, the Emperor's nephew and heir, is ideally happy with his unroyal wife, Sophie Chotek and her three children, who can never share his rank even when he in turn wears the crown of Austria-Hungary; and for love of Mademoiselle Adamovics, a pretty singer, the Archduke Leopold Ferdinand was glad to lay aside his royal trappings, and as "Herr Wolfing," to lead the simple life in Switzerland with the woman of his choice.

Like the Hapsburgs, the Hohenzollerns have many such romantic alliances in their records. Prince Joachim Albrecht, and Prince Augustus of Prussia, both had actresses for brides; and Prince Adalbert, brother of the late Queen of Bavaria, has as morganatic wife, Terese Elser, a gifted dancer of her day.

In a Quandary.

A charming hostess who was entertaining a party of children discovered one little fellow sitting in a corner apparently lost in thought.

"What are you thinking about, Harry?"

"Mother told me not to take two oranges," piped the little man, "and I was thinking I would be mighty lucky if I got one!"—London Telegraph.

use that has proved almost to make a machine show equal discrimination.

Dieting the Iron Chancellor.

When we recall Bismarck's terrific achievements in the way of food and drink it should not be forgotten that he had eventually to pay the penalty. Cancer was feared, but Dr. Schweiningen discovered the truth by a series of questions, which Bismarck angrily resented until the doctor remarked that if he did not want to answer questions he should consult a veterinary surgeon. Then Bismarck was put upon a diet of salt herrings for six weeks, to which a little butter, bread and potatoes were presently added. And hardest of all, drink was at first absolutely forbidden, relaxation presently coming to the extent of a few mouthfuls of spring water an hour after meals.—London Chronicle.

Getting at the Truth.

Was he rich, or was he poor? She wanted very much to know before giving him an answer to the momentous question. So, after thinking deeply for a minute, "I'm afraid we shouldn't get along very well," she said. "You are too extravagant."

"Extravagant?" he repeated. "On the contrary, I'm very economical. I have to be," he added as an afterthought.

"Then I can never consent to be your wife."

"Because I'm economical?" he gasped, astonished at her logic.

"No," she replied, "but because you have to be."

Exorcising Disease.

Very curious methods were employed by the ancient Babylonians to exorcise disease. The sucking pig and kid played an important part in the remedies. The pig or kid was to be killed, cut up and placed upon the sick man. The heart of the pig, which had been placed upon the sick man's heart, was to be held by him, and the pig's heart was to be as his heart, the blood as his blood, the flash as his flesh, and the pig was to be in his stead. The kid was dealt with in the same way, being placed upon the sick man.

Medical Case.

A young doctor said to a girl, "Do you know, dear, I have a heart affection for you?"

"Have you had it lung?" she coyly inquired.

"Oh, yes; I feel that I will liver troubled life without you!" he fervently responded.

"Then you had better asthma," she softly murmured.

Neither Still Nor Small.

"When you do something you know is wrong doesn't a still, small voice keep reminding you of it eternally?"

"A still, small voice! I guess you never met my wife, did you?"

us, and I suppose nothing will induce that individual to amend his ways; but I suggest that the theatre managers might very well make it a rule that those who enter the house after the curtain rises should either be compelled to cool their heels in the corridors until it falls at the end of the particular act or be requested to stand at the side of the theatre until the interval. Probably, the latter course would be the preferable one to follow, since many playgoers are made late by their train service. But some such course must be taken if playgoing is to have any attraction at all.

When Mr. Forbes-Robertson began his farewell season recently at Drury Lane, London, with the production of "Hamlet," this nuisance of the late-comer became even more pronounced than usual, for the first scene of the play, in which the air of mystery and tragic destiny is created, was totally ruined by attendants, armed with electric lamps, showing ladies and gentlemen to their seats. How is it possible for one to feel the thrill of the supernatural at the appearance of the ghost of Hamlet's father when a charming lady treads on your toes as she seeks her seat? How can you realize the terror of the sentinels and Horatio at the sight of the spectre when someone is whispering "Sorry!" in your ear as he presses past you? Or feel the eeriness of Elsinore when there is a continual banging of seats all over the theatre? While Mr. Grendon Bentley was speaking Mr. Shaw's Prologue to "Caesar and Cleopatra" there was a regular cannonade of banged seats, so that much of the finely phrased speech was lost, and this disturbance continued well into the middle of the first scene.

It is obvious that conduct of this kind is destructive of the atmosphere of illusion which is essential to the performance of any play, and it is grossly unfair not only to the players, whose work is being ruined, but also to those members of the audience who have had the common civility to arrive at the theatre in time.

But the nuisance of the latecomer is not the only trouble in the theatre. There has lately been an epidemic of distressing coughs among playgoers. At the first performance of "Open Windows" there was an incessant barking during the whole of the first act and frequently during the remainder of the performance. At one moment six gentlemen coughed simultaneously, and it seemed to me that they coughed as loudly as they could.

The ventilation of the theatre is generally faulty, but I am certain that a great deal of the coughing that goes on in playhouses is unnecessary; at all events, it cannot be essential that the cough should be as noisy as possible, I am not aware that the ventilation of an opera house is any better than the ventilation of a theatre, but I do know that an audience of music-lovers would not tolerate the coughing that is patiently endured by playgoers.

Couldn't Move Her.

A story is told by a well-known divine of another divine, who preached a very eloquent sermon, some of the congregation being so deeply affected as to shed tears. One old lady, however, sat bolt upright, apparently untouched by the clergyman's eloquence. Rather annoyed at such irresponsiveness, the preacher's wife approached the lady referred to. "Excuse me, madam," she said, "but may I remark that you didn't seem much affected by the sermon, though everybody else was?" "No," replied the old lady. "It didn't affect me because he is not really my clergyman. You see, I don't belong to this parish!"

Excursion to Guelph.

About 400 attended the excursion to the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, held on Friday, June 13th. On arrival at Guelph, the electric cars carried the excursionists direct to the college, where a splendid lunch was served. Afterwards Prof. C. A. Zavitz took the visitors over his experimental plots. The most interesting were a series of plots of alfalfa, sown five years ago. On some plots only an old plant remained; in the next plot the alfalfa was very thick and eighteen inches high. What was the difference? The alfalfa that killed out was the ordinary blue alfalfa that is commonly sold by seedsmen; the hardy alfalfa is Ontario Variegated, a variety that originated in Haldimand County, Ontario. Seed of this variety can now be obtained in quantity at a price of about $15.00 per bushel. Prof. Geo. E. Day showed the visitors the live stock, after which the excursionists visited the poultry, dairy, green-houses, gardens, and orchards. Demonstrations were given for the ladies at Macdonald Institute in cooking, laundrying, and buttermaking. All who made the trip enjoyed themselves thoroughly. If support is given, it is probable that this excursion to Guelph will be made an annual event.

NOXIOUS WEEDS AND INSE

Next winter specimens of weeds will be used for Short Course work for identification purposes. The insects will be numbered and classified according to order, and stored in special boxes. Farmers are requested to bring to the Agricultural Office for identification any weed they do not know the name of. The Agricultural Office will identify the weed and also methods of control. Specimens of insect pests doing damage should be brought in, when methods of control will be given. This service is free to farmers, gardeners and growers. Some weeds that have been identified the past week are: (Beard, Stinkweed, Mouse-eared weed, Matrimony weed, Orange Weed, and King Devil or Hawk weed. A Story of St. Paul's.

A singular fact in the history of St. Paul's cathedral, London, is that the first stone which the architect ordered the masons to bring from the rubbish of the former cathedral, destroyed by fire, was part of a sarcophagus, on which had been inscribed the single word "Resurgam" ("I shall rise again"). The prophecy was fulfilled, for out of the ruins of old a veritable poem in marble has arisen.

A TIME SAVER.

The favorable weather of June is bringing some good records of milk produced by cows trained to the business by far sighted owners. Grade cows yielding as much as 2,300 pounds of milk and 65 pounds of fat in thirty days are well worth keeping as many factory patrons can testify.

On the other hand some poor records were made during May in several districts, not only in yields of milk but in many instances in peculiarly low percentage of fat; even less than two per cent. That is one good reason why it pays farmers to take up cow testing, for with the tests ranging, as they frequently do in the same herd from 2.1 to 4.3 with common grade cows giving almost the same weight of milk and handled under similar conditions, there is evidently plenty of room for considerable difference in returns.

As a matter of fact, cow testing was never more needed than at the present time when farmers are complaining that it is hard to get good hired help. The time spent in taking a few weights and samples is saved over and over again, a hundred times over, when it proves to a man that he saves time by milking profitable cows only. Why waste precious time month after month, year after year, on cows that test only two per cent of fat?

Drinking Tea Through a Reed.

The natives of Paraguay in drinking their mate tea do not pour it from a teapot into a cup as Europeans are accustomed to drink tea, but fill a goblet with the beverage and then suck it up through a long ornamented tube. The former is generally made out of a pumpkin or gourd, while the tube is a long reed, but with the upper classes it is often made of solid silver. Both reed and gourd are richly carved. The natives say that this tea is an excellent remedy for fever and rheumatism.

prove this statement and show us clearly that it is only the "jaundiced eye" that fails to note the onward sweep of Temperance and other Reform Measures. In the "Tidings" for June appears an article on the "Pioneer Temperance Hospital" which decidedly "points a moral" in regard to the increased Temperance sentiment during the last forty years. This article recalls the fact that when, forty years ago, the first Temperance Hospital was founded in London, England, three days passed before any patient entered, as all feared its non-alcoholic dietary, but last year the hospital had 27,784 out-patients and 1,520 in-patients. According to prominent physicians its work and management have been exceptionally successful. One of the ardent admirers is Sir Victor Horsley, the eminent English surgeon, who has exposed so ably and fearlessly the fiendish cruelty of the Forcible Feeding which the present English government has adapted in its quite unsuccessful attempt to cow English women. According to Sir Walter Horsley the Temperance Hospital has been a "pioneer in medical science," and has shown that it is not impossible to prepare certain tinctures and medicines without alcohol.

SCHOONER SUNK

WINNIE WING RAMMED BY DREDGE SCOW AND SUNK IN THE RIVER.

On Friday afternoon last the Schooner Winnie Wing, owned by Mr. R. B. Shipman, was coming up the river with coal for Gleason in tow of a tug. When near the brick yard she met the tug employed by the dredge taking out mud scows to dump them. One of the scows struck the Winnie Wing smashing a hole in her side and in a few moments she sank almost across the channel with her deck a couple of feet below water and almost completely blocking the channel. In sinking she took the scow down with her. The dredge was taken down to the scene of the accident on Monday, released the scow and dredged a channel around the wreck.

LARGE BARN BURNED, WITH OTHER BUILDINGS

Result of Explosion of a Gasoline Engine Operating a Milker.

Ingersoll, June 17th.—Fire which followed the explosion of a gasoline engine operating a milking machine caused the destruction of a large modern barn, a cement milk-house and a pig-pen on the farm of Mr. William Butler of Dereham Centre to-night. All the stock in the buildings was saved. Forty cows were stabled when the fire broke out. The flames spread with such rapidity that all efforts to arrest their progress were futile, and the large barn, one of the finest in Dereham township, was quickly devoured. The work of rescuing the livestock was begun in a systematic manner, and there was no interruption until every animal had been taken out of the burning buildings. The loss will reach several thousands of dollars, and is partly covered by insurance. —Toronto Globe.

THE MOST PRECIOUS TEXT IN THE BIBLE

How Differently It Reads From What We Once Supposed.

Unintentionally We Read Errors Into
Our Bibles—Our Eyes Were Dimmed by "Dark Ages" Smoke—The Fog Lifts—God's Glory Begins to Appear — The Bible Shines — Its Truth is the Balm of Gilead.

Pasadena, Cal., June 15.—Pastor Russell spoke here this afternoon and evening. His evening sermon we report. His text was, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16.) He said:—

This text by some has been styled "the most precious text in the Bible." To read it is to be filled with the thought of the sin which has marred God's fair creation. Then comes the reviving announcement of mercy, through the Son of God, our Saviour, through a work which He alone could accomplish for us, a race of sinners condemned to death.

Forcefully the Pastor pointed out that once Christian people, even Bible students, misunderstood this text, and read it as though it said that God so loved the world as to keep them from perishing, in order that the elect few might look over the battlements of Heaven and see the non-elect writhing in torture—unable to perish—forced to live, that by their sufferings they might entertain the more fortunate, who were guaranteed bliss to the full.

What right did we ever have, said the Pastor, thus to put into the mouth of our Saviour, as our creeds have done, words which He never uttered—words which are very untrue, indeed, a blasphemy against our Maker!

Light Shines Through the Fog.

We are not faulting our forefathers, said the Pastor. Had we been in their places, we would have been as confused as they, and we might have indulged in heretic-burning, etc. And had they lived in our wonderful day of great light, knowledge, education, Bibles, etc., doubtless they would have had as noble ideas as ourselves respecting the proprieties of Christian and Divine conduct, and Love and Justice. The Bible tells us that Satan and his fallen angels are responsible for those terrible "doctrines of demons," which have given thinking people such horrible nightmares, and driven so many away from God into unbelief.

Let us rejoice in the light of this better Day. Let us become Bible students in the highest sense of the term. Never before has there been such an opportunity for knowing the real teaching of God's Book. We have Bibles, concordances, helps, and general education which permits us to study these. Our forefathers labored against lack of education, time, Bibles and good artificial light. Surely the wonders of our day indicate that the new Day is upon us, that the sunlight of Messiah's Kingdom will soon

CATTLE MARKETS

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, June 16.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ended June 14 were 1100 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 1900 hogs and 600 calves. The offerings this morning amounted to 800 cattle, 750 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 525 calves.

Owing to the smaller supply of cattle the market opened stronger, with holders of choice loads of steers, asking as high as $7.50 to $7.60 per cwt., which buyers refused to pay, consequently trade during the early hours was rather slow, but later sellers came down in their views to the extent of 25c to 30c per cwt., which was more in line with buyers' views, and trade improved rapidly. Demand from packers was fairly good, with choice steers selling from $7.30 to $7.55, good at $6.50 to $6.75, and cows at $6.25 to $6.35 per cwt.

I. O. D. E.

On Wednesday afternoon the 18th inst., the United Empire Loyalist Chapter was most hospitably enter- tained at "Fairview," Mrs. M. C. Bogart's residence, the occasion being a postponed celebration of His Majesty's birthday. The Chapter was well represented, a large number of the members being present, with several visitors. The house looked very festive with numerous flags and bowls of lovely flowers everywhere. The Regent, Mrs. Harshaw, opened the proceedings with a few appropriate remarks, referring to the date, the 18th June, being the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, that great victory to British arms, which caused the overthrow of Napoleon and meant so much to Europe and the Empire. There was a very good programme, the Misses VanLuven very kindly contributing a duet, and Miss Helen VanLuven a very sweet song and also an excellent piano solo. Miss Constance Grange favored the Chapter with a vocal number well rendered. A feature of the day was the well-read extract of the late Mrs. Symington's trip, written by herself, from Cairo to Karnak, the book being very kindly loaned the Chapter by Mr. Symington which was much appreciated by its members. Mrs. Sale, a member of the Victoria League, of London, England, whom we were glad to welcome again, very kindly spoke informally to the Chapter of the need for the better class of English women in British Columbia and the West, and the means being used in those localities to teach and fit them for their position as regards their part in the future development of those provinces, and of the assistance being given them through the Hostel in Vancouver, which was established as a commem- oration of the Coronation by the British Columbia Chapters of the Daughters of the Empire. After re- pairing to the tea room, which was most tastefully decorated with flowers and a beautifully set table, at which the Regent and 1st Vice-Regent pre- sided, and partaking of most delicious refreshments, the Chapter reluctantly bid its kind hostess goodbye after a most enjoyable afternoon.

The Chapter wishes to thank most cordially, all those who in any way contributed to the success of the after- noon.

A Novel Charge.

For the first time in Canada, it is said, a charge was laid the other day in Toronto which is not without con- siderable interest. It is termed "Con- spiring to compensate."

In January last Louis Siegel was arrested for stealing a large quantity of furs, and Abraham Panzer went bail for him.

It is now alleged that Panzer was compensated for so doing, to the ex- tent of $25, and Nathan Shapiro, along with Louis Panzer, are said to have negotiated the amount. Shapiro got a loan of a diamond pin, pawned it and then got some more money from Louis Panzer, with the ticket as security.

All three are now charged with the conspiracy.

There have been convictions in the old country on a similar count and it is on the English law that the pres- ent charge is now made.

ents in the highest sense of the term. Never before has there been such an opportunity for knowing the real teaching of God's Book. We have Bibles, concordances, helps, and general education which permits us to study these. Our forefathers labored against lack of education, time, Bibles and good artificial light. Surely the wonders of our day indicate that the new Day is upon us, that the sun- light of Messiah's Kingdom will soon break forth through every cloud!

What the Word "Perish" Means.

When we think of it, the word "per- ish" contains not the remotest sug- gestion of fire or torture. In our ig- norance we read that meaning into this and similar texts. Look criti- cally at our text. It corroborates the account in Genesis 2, as explained by St. Paul in Romans 5:12-18. By one man's disobedience sin entered the world, and death as a result of sin, and so death passed upon all men, because all are sinners—by heredity.

This death penalty has been carry- ing our race to the tomb for six thou- sand years. The Scriptural declara- tion is that all these would have per- ished—would have had no future ex- istence any more than the brute— had it not been for God's compassion. "The great Love wherewith He loved us while we were yet sinners."— Ephesians 2:4.

Other Scriptures tell us that the death of Jesus was a Ransom-price, or price corresponding to the penalty upon Adam and his race. By provid- ing an equivalent price for the sin- penalty against Adam, God can be just in releasing us from the death penalty.

All Saved From Perishing.

The simple proposition of the Bible is that as Adam and all of his race legally perished, so they have all been legally redeemed from that perished condition—Jesus' death being the Sat- isfaction-price. Because of this re- demption the Bible assures us that there is to be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust.

The Bible further assures us that the resurrection of mankind must wait until the completion of the Church of Christ. Then the Second Coming of Christ will be in order, that He may exalt His Church with Himself as the reigning Power, the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, which God has promised shall be exalted to glory for the very purpose of blessing all the families of the earth—the non-elect—in the glorious Mes- sianic Kingdom.

Served Upon the Knees.

There is a story told of Grammont, who one day dined in state with Charles II. of England. Charles bade the count to notice that the servants knelt while they served the dishes, a mark of respect to guests of the king not common at other courts. "I thank your majesty for the explanation," answered Grammont. "I thought they were begging pardon for giving you so bad a dinner."

KINGSTON, June 17.—Paul Brown, a life prisoner, aged 51, died in the penitentiary. He had served fourteen years for murder. The remains were sent to his home near Trenton. Lewis Lawrence, Dorchester, Quebec, serv- ing five years sentence for theft, died about the same time. He had been ailing for a year. He was forty-five years old. The remains will be sent home.

TO PROBE SHOOTING.

Calback Tragedy at Collingwood to Be Investigated.

COLLINGWOOD, June 17.—In an effort to clear up the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. James Calback at her home here on Sunday morning, a jury was yesterday em- panelled by Coroner McFaul. After viewing the body, adjournment was made until Wednesday afternoon. Considerable doubt exists as to whether the 22-calibre rifle which caused death was accidentally discharged while in the mother's hands or whether the four-year-old boy, Jimmie, did the shooting.

The statement of the husband, Jas. Calback, is that the child had been suffering several nights from the tooth- ache, and shortly after twelve o'clock awoke and became fretful. To quiet him the mother is said to have given him some dishes off the sideboard, and also a small 22 rifle with which it had frequently played. These quieted him so that he stopped crying, and the father returned to his bed in an- other room, leaving the mother and the child together in the kitchen, where the fatality occurred.

Shortly after, Mr. Calback and his father, who lives with them, were startled by the report of the rifle and a scream. Both immediately rushed to the kitchen to find the woman ly- ing on the floor dead. The bullet en- tered her left breast, striking the col- larbone and deflecting downward to- wards the heart, causing almost in- stant death.

Terrors of the Dutch Language.

The names of the streets and the names over the shop doors in Holland are eminently calculated to tie your eye up in a knot. To come suddenly upon a dog show and find it called a rashondententoonstelling and upon an announcement which reads "Rijnsprooewegmaatschappijjaan den daartoe aangewesen vertegenwoordiger" is calculated to stagger one, but apart from a language which is trying alike to the eye and the tongue Holland is a delightful place, and the Dutch are a splendid people.

When a Tornado Comes.

It is instinctive to shut up a house tight against an approaching storm, but this is the worst possible course, for the gyrating tornado brings with it an area of relative vacuum and when it passes a tightly closed house the house is in danger of being burst asunder by the pressure of the con- fined air. The safe course is to throw everything wide open and then make for the cellar.

Siamese Object to Walking.

The Siamese, above all nations in the world, hate to walk. No such mode of progression is tolerated by a Siamese if he or she can by any means ride. A Venetian gondolier will walk sometimes, even a Hollander will ride on his rough cart, but a Bangkok man—not if he can help it. His family boat for him.

ONTARIO POLITICS

NORTH GREY CONTEST.

General satisfaction is expressed at the candidacy of Mr. John McQuaker, who has been nominated by the Liberals to contest the North Grey seat for the local House made vacant by the resignation of Hon. A. G. MacKay. The nomination meeting was the scene of very real enthusiasm and it is confidently expected that Mr. McQuaker will hold the seat in the Liberal interests.

He is a well known temperance man and with him as candidate the Abolish the Bar policy is sure to play an important part.

Mr. McQuaker is a commission merchant in Owen Sound and also the owner of a creamery.

AYLMER PICNIC.

A procession composed exclusively of automobiles over a mile long in a town the size of Aylmer is quite an event. This was but one of many unusual features in connection with the monster Liberal picnic held in that town on June 12. The celebration was held at the Fair Grounds and the large grand stand was not nearly large enough to hold the crowds. The leading speakers were N. W. Rowell, K. C., M. P. P., Hon. George P. Graham, Hon. Mackenzie King and W. T. Charleton, Liberal candidate in East Elgin for the Dominion House. Mr. Rowell referred to the resignation of the Hungarian Cabinet owing to the Prime Minister having taken a contribution from a firm doing business with the Country. "Are the people of Ontario," asked Mr. Rowell, "less sensitive than the people of Hungary on questions affecting the honor of our public men and the honest administration of public affairs? I do not believe they are. Except as to the amount of the contribution and except that the payment was made in the one case to the Prime Minister and in the other to the Provincial Secretary, all that was established in the Hungarian case Sir James Whitney and Mr. Hanna were forced to admit. The principles laid down in the case of the Hungarian Cabinet applied equally to the Whitney Government with this important addition, that with the Whitney Government the act was not only illegal but was criminal as well. Mr. Rowell said that if the members of any British Cabinet had been found guilty of any such conduct, public opinion in Great Britain would have demanded their retirement. He declared that the Government had purchased the silence of the man who was prepared to expose them, not with their own money but at the expense of the people of the Province. He was referring to the abandonment by the Government of the defences it had set up in the Taylor-Scott suit, in which on the judgment of Mr. Thorne as sole arbitrator without appeal, Mr. Taylor. (The Taylor Scott Co.) received $21,000 of the people's money. As the explanation of such action on the part of the Government, Mr. Rowell quoted a sentence from the Thorne letter. "The Whitney Government," it stated, "as such were just as near to an overthrow about December 1911 as it is possible to go. The fuse was ready and the match lighted."

"And it was with the people's money," declared Mr. Rowell, "that this exposure was suppressed."

Mr. Rowell complained that the Prime Minister had been constantly misrepresenting his Abolish the Bar policy and therefore took this occasion to state in definite terms exactly what that policy meant. By it, every bar-room, that is to say hotel liquor licenses, would be wiped out, every club license would be wiped out and the people's money would be used to pay the expenses of the government.

Following the inauguration ceremony the people came and bowed before the king.

LOTS OF RUSSIAN NUB

Their Blood May Not Be Blue, but Have White Bones.

In reference to an amazing prophecy of Russian titles Rothay Re in "My Russian Year" says:

"In Russia all the descendant hereditary nobleman are noble, the descendants of princes, count barons enjoy the right to use titles; hence there are rich prince poor princes, princes with distasteful manners and princes with no manners, elegant princes and prince could not possibly be seen without down placidly with, princes 1 acres and princes in garrets, prince who are desirable parties and prince who advertise in the newspaper wives with money.

"A glance at the St. Petersburg rectory and a rough calculation that there are some 200 men, and children in the capital alone all belong to the same princely title and bear the same name and a title.

"The first prince I met in St. Petersburg was the head waiter of the de France. He had an incontestable right to the title and was an ex-servant. His case, however, ought to be cited as an instance of the of the Russian nobility, for he Tartar from a part of the Caucasus where princes were so abundant when Russia acquired it only who could produce a certain number of sheep were granted the legal right to preserve the title. Many bore sheep for the purpose, and prince so common at the present day, beggar boys in Tiflis give the title each other.

"Russian nobles do not have blood; they have white bones. Most people have black bones. It is of the leveling of society by the baseness of the nobility great tance is attached to the possession of the white bones."

CROWNED WITH A SILK

West African Savages Have a Way of Inaugurating a King

In "The Fetish Folk of West Africa" Mr. Robert H. Milligan describes grotesque ceremony of inaugurating a native king:

The king was chosen from among people by the elders, and he was crowned for his wisdom. The ceremony his enthronement were such that required not only wisdom, but also age, physical strength and a suggestion. The man's first intimation that he had been chosen by the was an onrush of the entire tribe to do him honor, but to abuse and insult him in every possible way.

They would hurl opprobrious epithets at him, curse him, spit upon him with mud and beat him, for said, from this time on he could these things to them, and they be powerless to retaliate. It was last chance!

They also reminded him of his failings in graphic and minute particulars. If the king survived this ment he was then taken to the king's house, where he was so invested with the insignia of the royal office in the shape of a silk bonnet except the king was permitted to wear a silk hat.

Following the inauguration ceremony the people came and bowed before the king.

lead pencil. He took this paper away, and on it were the mysterious scrawls that had worried the keepers.

But the deputy got an idea from this, and, going back to the office, he wrapped the strip around an octagon shaped lead pencil and after several trials adjusted it so that the parts of letters fitted together and made a sentence, though the writing was very fine.

The writer had adopted the simple ingenious plan of covering the lead pencil with the paper and had then written along one of the flat sides. On unrolling it the writing was as mystical as a cryptogram, but when put around the pencil, as it was originally, it could be easily understood.—Dallas News.

Almost the Speed Limit.

"No man is a coward—to himself," said the war veteran oratorically.

"At Chattanooga one of the men in my company left early in the action, and no one saw him till after the battle, when he appeared in camp unwounded and unabashed. Some of the boys accused him of running away, but he wouldn't admit it.

"I only retreated in good order," he declared.

"I heard of the matter, and a few days later I asked him if he had any idea how fast he had 'retreated'.

"Well, I'll tell you, cap'n," he said, 'if I'd been at home and goin' after the doctor folks that see me passin' would have thought my wife was right sick!'"—Youth's Companion.

money," declared Mr. Rowell, "that this exposure was suppressed."

Mr. Rowell complained that the Prime Minister had been constantly misrepresenting his Abolish the Bar policy and therefore took this occasion to state in definite terms exactly what that policy meant. By it, every barroom, that is to say hotel liquor licenses, would be wiped out, every club license would be wiped out and the treating system would be abolished. As to the shops—at the present time they existed in only about one-tenth of the municipalities of the Province. The Liberal policy, therefore, would mean in nine-tenths of the municipalities the complete abolition of the retail sale of liquor and in the remaining one-tenth where shops now exist they would be subjected to further restrictions and would be wiped out by local option where the electors so decide.

PICNIC AT ERIN.

Two important new points were brought out by Wm. Proudfoot, K.C., M.P.P., in his speech at the Liberal picnic in Erin on June 13. In the first place, he stated that Sir James Whitney and Hon. W. J. Hanna, through their counsel had by means of a third party informed George C. Taylor of his violation of the criminal code in paying over the $500 to the ground that it would incriminate him. They knew that the same thing applied to Hon. W. J. Hanna who received the money. Mr. Proudfoot went further and stated that the counsel for the Prime Minister and the Provincial Secretary had been informed that Mr. Taylor declined to take the shelter pointed out to him and that if directed by the Committee he would tell the whole truth. "Was that the reason," asked Mr. Proudfoot, "why you decided that the evidence should not be admitted?"

In the second place, Mr. Proudfoot made a definite statement in regard to the coal tenders. He declared that he had evidence of the actual manipulating of coal tenders whereby the Province lost between $1500 and $1600.

EVEN THE BIRDS.

Goderich has an interesting freak in the shape of a talking crow, which says among other things:

"Proudfoot, he's all right."

"Whitney; Hanna, ha, ha, Hanna."

"Say, boys, who has the 500?"

The crow was tamed by the little daughter of R. R. Sallows. She split the crow's tongue and educated it so that it rests on the trees leading from the Central and Separate school, keeping up an animated conversation on local topics, calling the boys and girls by their names, and saying such phrases as: "I can't, boys, because I'm married now."

Coming by Thousands.

Bringing with them cash and settlers' effects valued at over half a million dollars, 1,845 citizens of the U.S. crossed the international boundary to make their home on Western Canadian prairies in one week.

These figures are for the week ending May 17 and are official amounts given out by J. Bruce Walker, commissioner of immigration and are as follows:

Cash, $388,235; effects, $140,358.

Total number of immigrants to come into Western Canada during the following week is 6,903, inclusive of 1,845 Americans and 3,184 British, a total of 73 per cent. English-speaking. Foreigners include 1,046 Russians, 300 Galicians, 385 Scandinavians, 93 Germans and 50 Italians.

Now that American seeding is completed, real movement of settlers into Western Canada is on in earnest, and each week until the start of harvesting toward the close of July will see increasing numbers coming northward.

fallings in graphic and minute particulars. If the king survived this meant he was then taken to the king's house, where he was so invested with the insignia of the office in the shape of a silk hat one except the king was permitted to wear a silk hat.

Following the inauguration ceremony the people came and bowed before the new king in humble submission they praised him as enthusiastically they had before reviled him. I was fed and feted for a week, which time he was not permitted to leave his house, but had to receive guests from all parts of his domain and eat with them all. These ceremonies ended, he turned to the comparatively easy and commonplace duties of his kingly office. This custom, many others, has passed away the influence of civilization.

Curious Letter Ending.

One of the most remarkable endings following one of the most remarkable letters on record is a sample from India preserved by Lucas in his anthology, "The Curious Art." "Honorable Sir—Kindly this poor thy servant from at on your honor's office this day, suffering from the well known commonly called ache of the economy, and I shall ever pray, ever painful, Ram Chunder. Oh, death, where is thy sting?"

Two Vacations.

Joe had not seen Bill for a long "Hello, Bill!" he said. "Still living, I see."

"Yes, Joe, but I am getting wobbly. I've had only two vacations in thirty-seven years, Joe, once I underwent a surgical operation a long time in order to buy a lot of cemetery."—Indianapolis News.

Concerning the Uplift.

"You are in favor of the uplift course."

"Yes," replied Farmer Corn "Only I haven't any special regard for a man who has a job of roof on hand and who refuses to climb a ladder in hopes that some one will bring along an elevator."—Winnipeg Star.

Henry Clay's Brother.

In the old cemetery at Camden the body of Porter Clay, brother of Henry Clay, has reposed since his death in 1850. He was admitted to the bar in Kentucky, became an auditor, but began to preach Baptist churches and in time he removed himself to that work. He was removed with his family to Camden, where a dispute with his authorities compelled him to resign his pastorate. Soon afterward he became a wandering evangelist, going to Camden in that capacity and founding a church. He died there in 1881, years before his illustrious brother. During all the years that he lived the women of this little church cared for his grave. At his death it was marked with a headboard. The New Century club of Camden has placed a stone slab over the grave.—Ar.

STRENUOUS LOVEMAKING.

Duke William Tamed Matilda, and She Get Square on Brihtric.

A modern lover who resorted to brute force to win his lady would soon find himself in the street, if not in the police station. But fashions in proposals have changed in a thousand years, and when William the Conqueror set out to make Matilda, daughter of the Count of Flanders, the happiest of maidens he adopted measures that were forcible, to say the least. The New York Sun tells the story of his tempestuous wooing:

The suitor Matilda had she did not want, and the man she wished to woo her she could not get. The man she did not want happened to be William, duke of Normandy, and he decided to go to Bruges and conquer Matilda.

There were no national roads through France in those days, and William doubtless had a hard trip. Perhaps Matilda noticed the mud on his clothes when she came out of church and found him waiting for her.

At any rate, William descended from his horse, and taking Matilda firmly by the back of the neck, rolled her over and over in the mire of Bruges, planting well directed blows upon her royal face and body with his other hand. Life was elemental a thousand years ago.

This strenuous lovemaking somehow appealed to Matilda. Perhaps it was what she would have liked to do to Brihtric, the gentleman she could not get, who was only the English ambassador at her father's court and not at all a proper person to be snubbing a princess. So Matilda sent word to her father that, "sick in health and dolorous in body," she had firmly resolved to marry no man but Duke William.

Later, after William had conquered England, he offered his queen the estates of any English nobleman she might name. Matilda did not have to think twice. She not only chose Brihtric's estates, but she put him in prison and kept him there all the rest of his life—an excellent argument for the wise custom of restricting woman's choice to one year in four.

DESOLATE MONGOLIA.

A Bleak Country, the Very Spirit of Which Is Restlessness.

Beyond the forests of Siberia lies the barren center of the Asiatic continent—that inhospitable, desolate land of nakedness, the haunt of roaming nomads, a region of bitter winds and hostile climate. In the very heart of the greatest continent, in that part of the earth's surface which is farthest removed from the sea, lies the lone, bleak land of Mongolia.

In all its immense area there are but few towns where men live settled lives, and it possesses but a scanty population, while because by its very position it is cut off from the softening influence of the sea it presents a dreary aspect of windy wastes, endless steppes and barren mountains.

Wild and wide is Mongolia, stretching as it does for 2,000 miles in the savage splendor of limitless expanse. Man cannot rest in such a country nor live a sedentary life. It has been the birthplace of the greatest migrations the world has ever seen. Restless movement, in fact, is the very spirit of Mongolia.

EXPLORER ON MISSIONS.

Stefansson Explains His Strictures on Eskimo Question.

The chapter opened by Christopher Columbus in 1492 is about to be closed by Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the Canadian explorer, if his forthcoming expedition to the north works out according to schedule. Said Dr. Stefansson recently: "If I succeed in discovering the unknown land lying to the north of the Dominion within the Arctic circle, and I have every hope of success, the last area of unexplored land on the face of the globe will have been discovered."

Dr. Stefansson has been a close student of the Eskimo and Northern Indian, and is not at all satisfied with the work the missionaries are doing in the north. In fact, the explorer holds the opinion that the efforts of the missionaries to civilize them must be blamed to a great extent for the fact that these races are fast dying out.

"I have no intention of minimizing the work of missionaries and missions, and I am in general sympathy with the purpose of the missions," said the traveler.

"While missionaries are undoubtedly sincere, there are certain details of their methods which are clearly at fault, and I fear that the reason is that the mission boards at home do not fully realize the conditions existing among the natives of the frozen north. While the missionaries are doing much good among the Eskimos they are also doing some positive harm. The harm should be remedied. In my experience of missionaries, they all do what they consider best for the spiritual welfare of the people, and insofar they are no doubt carrying out exactly the intentions of the mission boards. But when it comes to the physical welfare of the people, then some of the missionaries, although they have the kindest possible hearts, are doing much less good than any ordinary non-medical man should be expected to do if he were properly instructed by the board under which he is working. In order words, I feel sure that if there were on the mission boards competent medical men to map out the medical program of the missionaries, not so much with regard to the treatment of diseases which already exist, as to the prevention of diseases which are about to come, then the missionary would do a great deal more than he is doing now, for there are certain serious contagious diseases which the missionaries, in their kind-hearted manner deplore, but which they are doing nothing intelligent to check.

"For instance, many missionaries are encouraging both Indians and Eskimos in the north to cease living

What history this land could tell if only its deserts could speak and its mountains bear witness! Here rode Genghis, the Mongol Alexander, the most ruthless and inhuman destroyer the world has experienced. On these wide plateaus wandered those Mongol herdsmen who fed their flocks and moved their camps with complete content and splendid isolation until at last the wanderlust came over them and they burst out from their fastness to overrun the world. —Wide World Magazine.

Spraying the Vines.

In some of the old musty record books there is a story of a vineyard in France which was devastated by grape rot, all except one row next to the road. The owner, an observing man, sought for the reason why this row should have remained unharmed and discovered that there had been a considerable deposit of limestone dust from the road, which had acted as a preservative. That was before the microscope had revealed secrets of fungous and bacterial life, but from it developed the whole practice, first, of dusting vines and trees and later spraying them.

The Oath Gesture.

The act of uplifting the hand during the taking of an oath is so ancient that it would be futile to even attempt to say when it started. Homer mentions it as common among the Greeks of his time, and it is also found in the earliest Biblical time. For instance, Abraham, the father of the Jewish people, says "I have lifted up my hand to Jehovah," showing that even at that remote period the practice was existent. It was from the Jews, of course, that the practice found its way into Christendom, where it has ever since held its place in judicial trials.—New York American.

about to come, then the missionary would do a great deal more than he is doing now, for there are certain serious contagious diseases which the missionaries in their kind-hearted manner deplore, but which they are doing nothing intelligent to check.

"For instance, many missionaries are encouraging both Indians and Eskimos in the north to cease living in tents and to build permanent houses, with the result that tuberculosis is making terrible ravages among them. I have known some missionaries, however, who have done exactly the opposite of this. Mr. Marsh, the Church of England missionary at Hay River, on the Great Slave Lake, was one of the few whom I know who seem to be thoroughly alive to the danger of allowing the natives to live in permanent houses, and he is doing all in his power to compel the Indians to revert to their earlier habits of living in wigwams.

"The Mission Boards leave too much to the personality of the men. If they have a good, wise man he does good, wise work on his own initiative. If the man fails to be wise, then he is pretty much left to his own devices, and the results are not so desirable. I don't want to commit myself at all as to which is the best Church, but I do believe that the Roman Catholic Church has a much better missionary organization than any of the others. Their work is along uniform lines."

"High Graders."

A departure from ordinary custom was made by the Ontario provincial police last year to counteract the "high graders," who during the past few months exerted unwonted efforts to smuggle Northern Ontario ore in large amounts through to the U. S. The Department has kept account of the weight seized by the constables in all parts and has recovered in all about 206 pounds, valued at $2,463, and producing 4,149 ounces of fine silver.

Some very interesting methods were resorted to by both men and women to bring the material in a crude state out of the region. Several used specially constructed duck bags which fitted in a natural manner about the body, and when loaded merely added to the corpulence of the individual. One woman trusting to the female attire for protection concealed 80 pounds in her skirts, but was intercepted before making good her escape. Another formed a metal belt of the silver ore suspended on strings, but shared the same fate.

"Who is here?" I demanded.

Only silence, except that I seemed to hear rapid breathing.

"Speak up or I'll shoot!" I said, not without an ugly feeling that he might be—even probably was—taking careful aim by my voice. I reached cautiously to the left and found the electric switch and turned it. The room was empty, but a portiere in a doorway at my right was shaking.

I leaped for the curtain and dragged it aside, to have a door just close in my face. When I had jerked it open I found myself in a short hall, and there were footsteps to my left. The footsteps seemed only beyond my reach, and at the other side of the room the swinging door into the pantry was swaying when I caught it.

I made a misstep in the pantry and brought up against a blank wall. It seemed to me I heard the sound of feet running up steps, and when I found a door at last I threw it open and dashed in.

The next moment the solid earth slipped from under my feet, I threw out my hand and it met a cold wall, smooth as glass. Then I fell—fell an incalculable distance, and the blackness of the night came over me and smothered me.

When I came to I was lying in darkness, and the stillness was absolute. I managed to make out that my prison was probably the dumbwaiter shaft to the basement kitchen. I had landed on top of the slide, and I seemed to be tied in a knot. The revolver was under me, and if it had exploded during the fall it had done no damage.

I had fallen feet first, evidently, and then crumpled up unconscious, for one of my ankles was throbbing. It was some time before I could stand erect, and even by reaching I could not touch the doorway above me. It must have taken five minutes for my confused senses to remember the wire cable and to tug at it. I was a heavy load for the slide, accustomed to nothing weightier than political dinners, but with much creaking I got myself at last to the floor above and stepped out, still into darkness, but free.

I held the revolver, and I lighted the whole lower floor. But I found nothing in the dining room or the pantry. Everything was locked and in good order. A small alcove off the library came next; it was undisturbed, but a tabouret lay on its side and a half dozen books had been taken from a low bookcase and lay heaped on a for about an hour and went back to Fred's again. A cousin of the dead man, an elderly bachelor named Parker, appeared and signified his willingness to take charge of the house during that day. The very hush of his voice and his black tie prompted Edith to remove Margery from him as soon as she could.

It was Sunday, and I went to the office only long enough to look over my mail. In the afternoon I had my first conversation with Fred and Edith, while Margery and the boys talked quietly in the nursery. They had taken a great fancy to her, and she was almost cheerful when she was with them.

"Well," said Fred, "what was it, Jack? Suicide?"

"I don't know," I replied bluntly.

"The Times-Post says it was murder and that they will prove it. And they claim the police have been called off."

I said nothing of Mr. Lightfoot and his visit to the office, but I made a mental note to see the Times-Post people and learn, if I could, what they knew.

"I cannot help thinking that he deserved very nearly what he got," Edith broke in, looking much less vindictive than her words. "When one thinks of the ruin he brought to poor Henry Butler and that Ellen has been practically an invalid ever since, I can't be sorry for him."

"What was the Butler story?" I asked.

"Henry Butler was treasurer of the state, and Mr. Fleming was his cashier," said Edith. "I don't know just what the trouble was. But you remember that Henry Butler killed himself after he got out of the penitentiary, and Ellen has been in one hospital after another. I would like to have her come here for a few weeks, Fred," she said appealingly. "She is in some sanitarium or other now, and we might cheer her a little."

Fred groaned.

"Have her if you like, petty," he said resignedly. "What about this young Wardrop, Jack? It looks to me as if the Times-Post reporter had a line on him."

"Hush," Edith said softly. "He is Margery's fiance, and she might hear you."

"How do you know?" Fred demanded.

"Look at her engagement ring," Edith threw back triumphantly. "And it's a perfectly beautiful solitaire too."

I caught Fred's eye on me and made my escape as soon as I could on the plea of going out to Bellwood. In the hall upstairs I met Margery.

"I saw Bella today," she said. "Mr. Knox, will you tell me why you stayed up last night? What happened in the house?"

"I—thought I heard some one in the library," I stammered, "but I found no one."

"Is that all the truth or only part of it?" she asked. "Why do men always evade issues with a woman?" Luckily, womanlike, she did not wait for a reply. She closed the nursery door and stood with her hand on the knob looking down.

"I wonder what you believe about all this?" she said. "Do you think my father—killed himself? You were there; you know. If some one would only tell me everything!"

It seemed to me it was her right to know. I told her what had happened at the White Cat. She heard me given the case. You two get together."

He paused at a corner. "Goodby," he said dejectedly. "I'm off to hunt some boys that have been stealing milk bottles. That's about my size these days." He turned around, however, before he had gone many steps and came back.

"Wardrop has been missing since yesterday afternoon," he said. "That is, he thinks he's missing. We've got him all right."

I went to the Times-Post office. Burton came in in a moment, a red haired young fellow, with a short thick nose and a muggy skin. He was rather stocky in build, and the pugnacity of his features did not hide the shrewdness of his eyes. I introduced myself, and at my name his perfunctory manner changed.

"Knox?" he said. "I called you last night over the 'phone."

I liked Burton. There was something genuine about him. After Wardrop's kid glove finish, he was a relief.

"Hunter of the detective bureau sent me here," I proceeded, "about the Fleming case."

CHAPTER XI.

Sizzling Metal.

BURTON took out his notebook. "You are the fourth today," he said. "Hunter himself, Lightfoot from Plattsburg and McFeely here in town. Well, Mr. Knox, are you willing now to put yourself on record that Fleming committed suicide?"

"No," I said firmly. "It is my belief that he was murdered."

"And that the secretary fellow, what's his name?—Wardrop?—that he killed him?"

"Possibly."

In reply Burton fumbled in his pocket and brought up a pasteboard box filled with jeweler's cotton. Underneath was a small object, which he passed to me with care.

"I got it from the coroner's physician, who performed the autopsy," he said casually. "You will notice that it is a thirty-two, and that the revolver they took from Wardrop was a thirty-eight. Question, Where's the other gun?"

I gave him back the bullet, and he rolled it around on the palm of his hand.

"Little thing, isn't it?" he said. "We think we're lords of creation until we see a quarter inch bichloride tablet or a bit of lead like this. Look here." He dived into his pocket again and drew out a roll of ordinary brown paper. When he opened it a bit of white chalk fell on the desk.

"Look at that," he said dramatically. "Kill an army with it, and they'd never know what struck them. Cyanide of potassium—and the druggist that sold it ought to be choked."

"Where did it come from?" I asked curiously. Burton smiled his cheerful smile.

"It's a beautiful case all around," he said as he got his hat. "I haven't had any Sunday dinner yet, and it's 5 o'clock. Oh—the cyanide? Clarkson, the cashier of the bank Fleming ruined, took a bite off that corner right there this morning."

"Clarkson?" I exclaimed. "How is he?"

"God only knows," said Burton gravely, from which I took it Clarkson was dead.

"The bullet. Nobody ever fired a bullet out of a .38 caliber revolver less he was trying to shoot a compound curve. Now, then, what look like?"

"Like Wardrop," I confessed. "Jove, they didn't both do it."

"And he didn't do it himself for good reasons; He had no motive, night and there were no marks."

"And the eleven twenty-two? Miss Maitland's disappearance?"

He looked at me with his quizzical smile.

"I'll have to have another shot I'm to settle that," he said. "I can solve one murder on one steak. Disappearances are my specialty, haps, if I have a piece of pie and cheese!"

But I got him away at last, a walked together down the street.

"I can't quite see the old lady," he confessed.

"Burton, who do you think is the Fleming house last night?"

"Lightfoot," he said succinctly. He stopped under a street lamp looked at his watch.

"I believe I'll run over to the tonight. While I'm gone—I'll be tomorrow night or the next morning I wish you would find Rosie O' or whatever her name is, and Carter. That's probably not his but it will answer for awhile. get your friend Hunter to keep a sight for awhile until I come back. "And go to Bellwood and find few things," he added. "It's all enough to say the old lady was a and timid person, but if you know her peculiarities go to her boss."

We separated at the station, I off to Plattsburg, I to take a taxi and armed with a page torn from classified directory to inquire many of the twelve Anderson's stores as might be necessary to Della's gentleman friend, "the through him Della and through the mysterious Carter.

I had checked off eight of the Andersons on my list without result the taximeter showed something $19 when the driver drew up at curb.

"Gentleman in the other cab is ing you, sir—the one that's belowing us."

A duplicate of my cab stood fifty feet behind, and from it a lar figure was slowly emerging. figure stopped to read the taxi shook his fist at the chauffeur as proached me. It was Davidson.

"That liar and thief back there got me rung up for $19," he snoring my amazement. "Nineteen lars and forty cents!"

He surveyed my expense account the driver's elbow, then hit the a smart slap, but the figures d change.

"Nineteen dollars!" he rep dazed. "Nineteen dollars and here," he called to his driver, "it's 30 cents here. Your clock's 10 fast."

He borrowed $8 and crawled in me.

"The next address on the list right one," he said. "I'm going you something. There were

I held the revolver, and I lighted the whole lower floor. But I found nothing in the dining room or the pantry. Everything was locked and in good order. A small alcove off the library came next; it was undisturbed, but a tabouret lay on its side and a half dozen books had been taken from a low bookcase and lay heaped on a chair. In the library, however, everything was confusion. Desk drawers stood open, one of the linen shades had been pulled partly off its roller, a chair had been drawn up to the long mahogany table in the center of the room, with the electric dome overhead, and everywhere, on chairs, over the floor, heaped in stacks on the table, were papers.

"Speak up or I'll shoot!" I said.

After searching the lower floor and finding everything securely locked, I went upstairs, convinced the intruder was still in the house. I made a systematic search of every room, looking into closets and under beds. I gave up at last, and, going down to the library, made myself as comfortable as I could and waited for morning.

I heard Bella coming down the stairs after some time; she came slowly, with dragging footsteps as if the slightest sound would send her scurrying to the upper regions again. A little later I heard her rattling the range in the basement kitchen, and I went upstairs and dressed.

I was too tired to have a theory about the night visitor. I was impressed with only one thing—that the enemy or enemies of the late Allan Fleming evidently carried their antagonism beyond the grave.

I had my ankle strapped with adhesive that morning by my doctor, and it gave me no more trouble. But I caught him looking curiously at the blue bruise on my forehead where Wardrop had struck me with the chair and at my nose, no longer swollen, but mustard yellow at the bridge.

Margery and Edith came to the house and stood with her hand on the door looking down.

"I wonder what you believe about all this?" she said. "Do you think my father—killed himself? You were there; you know. If some one would only tell me everything!"

It seemed to me it was her right to know. I told her what had happened at the White Cat. She heard me through quietly.

"And so the police have given up the case?" she said despairingly. "And if they had not, Harry would have been arrested."

"The police have not exactly given up the case," I told her, "but there is such a thing, of course, as stirring up a lot of dust and then running to cover before it settles. By the time the public has wiped it out of its eyes and sneezed it out of its nose and coughed it out of its larynx, the dust has settled in a heavy layer, clews are obliterated and the public lifts its skirts and chooses another direction. The 'no thoroughfare' sign is up."

"Whoever killed my father—and it was murder, Mr. Knox—whoever did it is going free to save a scandal. All my friends—she smiled bitterly—"are afraid of the same thing. But I can not sit quiet and think nothing can be done. I must know, and you are the only one who seems willing to try to find out."

So it was, that, when I left the house I had been commissioned by the girl I loved—for it had come to that—to clear her lover of her father's murder and so give him back to her, not in so many words, but I was to follow up the crime, and the rest followed. And I was morally certain of two things—first, that her lover was not worthy of her; and, second and more to the point, that innocent or guilty, he was indirectly implicated in the crime.

I had promised her also to see Miss Lettita that day if I could, and I turned over the events of the preceding night as I walked toward the station. Bella had told Margery that I had been up all night. Could Bella—But I dismissed the thought as absurd—Bella, who had scuttled to bed in a panic of fright, would never have dared the lower floor alone, and Bella, given all the courage in the world, could never have moved with the swiftness and light certainty of my midnight prowler.

But, after all, I did not go to Bellwood. I met Hunter on my way to the station, and he turned around and walked with me.

"So you've lain down on the case," I said.

He grumbled something unintelligible.

"Of course," I persisted, "being a simple and uncomplicated case of suicide, there was nothing in it anyhow. If it had been a murder under peculiar circumstances"—

He stopped and gripped my arm.

"For 10 cents," he said gravely, "I would tell the chief and a few others what I think of them, and then I'd go out and get full."

"Not on 10 cents."

"I'm going out of the business!" he stormed. "I'm going to drive a garbage wagon. It's cleaner than this job. Suicide! I never saw a cleaner case of"—He stopped suddenly. "Do you know Burton of the Times-Post?"

"No; I've heard of him."

"Well, he's your man. They're dead against the ring, and Burton's been any Sunday dinner yet, and it's 5 o'clock. Oh—the cyanide? Clarkson, the cashier of the bank Fleming ruined, took a bite off that corner right there this morning."

"Clarkson!" I exclaimed. "How is he?"

"God only knows," said Burton gravely, from which I took it Clarkson was dead.

Burton listened while he ate, and his cheerful comments were welcome enough after the depression of the last few days. I told him, after some hesitation, the whole thing, beginning with the Maitland pearls and ending with my drop down the dumbwaiter. I knew I was absolutely safe in doing so. There is no person to whom I would rather tell a secret than a newspaper man. He will go out of his way to keep it. He will lock it in the depths of his bosom and keep it until seventy times seven. Also, you may threaten the rack or offer a larger salary, the seal does not come off his lips until the word is given. If then he makes a scarehead of it, and gets in three columns of space and as many photographs, it is his just reward.

Burton ate enough beefsteak for two men and missed not a word.

"The money Wardrop had in the grip—that's easy enough explained," he said. "Fleming used the Borough bank to deposit state funds in. He must have known it was rotten; he and Clarkson were as thick as thieves. According to a time honored custom in our land of the brave and home of the free a state treasurer who is crooked can, in such a case, draw on such a bank without security on his personal note, which usually is worth its value by the pound as old paper."

"And Fleming did that?"

"He did. Then things got bad at the Borough bank. Fleming had had to divide with Schwartz and the Lord knows who all, but it was Fleming who had to put in the money to avert a crash, the word crash being synonymous with scandal in this case. He scrapes together a paltry hundred thousand, which Wardrop gets at the capital and brings on. Wardrop is robbed, or says he is; the bank collapses and Clarkson, driven to the wall, kills himself just after Fleming is murdered. What does that sound like?"

"Like Clarkson!" I exclaimed. "And Clarkson knew Fleming was hiding at the White Cat!"

"Now, then, take the other theory," he said, pushing aside his cup. "Wardrop goes in to Fleming with a story that he has been robbed; Fleming gets crazy and attacks him. All that is in the morning—Friday. Now, then, Wardrop gets back there that night. Within twenty minutes after he enters the club he rushes out, and when Hunter follows him he says he is looking for a doctor to get cocaine for a gentleman upstairs. He is white and trembling. They go back together and find you there and Fleming dead. Wardrop tells two stories. First he says Fleming committed suicide just before he left. Then he changes it and says he was dead when he arrived there. He produces the weapon with which Fleming is supposed to have killed himself and which, by the way, Miss Fleming identified yesterday as her father's. But there are two discrepancies. Wardrop practically admitted that he had taken that revolver from Fleming, not that night, but the morning before during the quarrel."

"And the other discrepancy?"

"Nineteen dollars and here," he called to his driver, "it's 30 cents here. Your clock's 10 fast."

He borrowed $8 and crawled in me.

"The next address on the list—right one," he said. "I'm going to you something. The chauffeur stopped his with an exasperated jerk and s down in his seat, every line of his bristling with irritation.

"I prefer learning from Carter self."

He leaned back in his seat and duced an apple from the pocket coat.

"You'll have to travel some to son," he said. "Carter left for unknown last night, taking wit enough money to keep him in co for some little time."

"Until all this blows over," bitterly.

"The trip was for the benefit health. He has been suffering at is suffering from a curious lay memory." Davidson smiled at r gagingly. "He has entirely for, everything that occurred from th he entered Mr. Fleming's emplo until that gentleman left hon doubt if he will ever recover."

Davidson left me at a corner down- town. He turned to give me a parting admonition.

"There's an old axiom in the mills around here, 'Never sit down on a piece of metal until yop spit on it.' If it siz- zles, don't sit." He grinned. "Your best position just now, young man, is standing, with your hands over your head. Confidentially, there ain't any- thing within expectorating distance just now that ain't pretty well bet up."

He left me with that, and I did not see him again until the night at the White Cat, when he helped put me through the transom. Recently, how- ever, I have met him several times. He invariably mentions the $8 and his intention of repaying it. Unfor- tunately the desire and the ability have not yet happened to coincide.

I took the evening train to Bellwood and got there shortly after 8 in the midst of the Sunday evening calm, and the calm of a place like Bellwood is the peace of death without the hope of resurrection.

Promiscuous inquiry was not advis- able. So far Miss Jane's disappear- ance was known to very few, and Hunter had advised caution. I wandered up the street and turned at random to the right. A few doors ahead a newish red brick building proclaimed itself the postoffice. It occurred to me that here inside was the one individual who, the- oretically at least, in a small place al- ways knows the idiosyncrasies of its people.

The postmaster proved to be a one armed veteran of the civil war, and he was sorting rapidly the contents of a mail bag, emptied on the counter.

"No delivery tonight," he said short- ly. "Sunday delivery, 2 to 3."

"I suppose, then, I couldn't get a dol- lar's worth of stamps?"

"We don't sell stamps on Sunday nights," he explained. "But if you're in a hurry for them"—

"I am," I lied. And after he had got them out, counting them with a wrin- kled finger, and tearing them off the sheet with the deliberation of age, I opened a general conversation.

It was when I asked him about his empty sleeve, and he had told me that he lost his arm at Chancellorsville, that we became really friendly. When he said he had been a corporal in General Maitland's command my path was one of ease.

"The Maitland ladies! I should say I do," he said warmly. "I've been fighting with Letitia Maitland as long as I can remember. That woman will scrap with the angel Gabriel at the resurrection, if he wakes her up be- fore she's had her sleep out."

"Miss Jane is not that sort, is she?"

"Miss Jane? She's an angel—she is that. She could have been married a dozen times when she was a girl, but Letitia wouldn't have it. I was after her myself forty-five years ago."

"I suppose from that the Maitland ladies are wealthy," I said.

"Wealthy! They don't know what they're worth—not that it matters a mite to Jane Maitland. It's a shame- ful thing that a woman as old as Jane should have to get her letters surrep- titiously. For more than a year now she's been coming here twice a week for her mail, and I've been keeping it for her. Rain or shine, Mondays and Thursdays, she's been coming, and a sight of letters she's been getting too."

CHAPTER XII.

A Walk in the Park.

THE funeral occurred on Monday. It was an ostentatious affair, with a long list of honorary pallbearers, a picked corps of city firemen in uniform ranged around the casket, and enough money wasted in floral pillows and sheaves of wheat tied with purple ribbon to have given all the hungry children in town a square meal.

Amid all this state Margery moved, stricken and isolated. She went to the cemetery with Edith, Miss Letitia hav- ing sent a message that, having never broken her neck to see the man living, she wasn't going to do it to see him dead. The music was very fine and the eulogy spoke of this patriot who had served his country so long and so well. "Following the flag," Fred commented under his breath, "as long as there was an appropriation attached to it."

And when it was all over we went back to Fred's until the Fleming house could be put into order again.

Mrs. Butler arrived that day, which made Fred suspicious that Edith's plan to bring her far antedated his consent. But she was there when we got home from the funeral, and after one glimpse at her thin face and hollow eyes I begged Edith to keep her away from Margery, for that day at least.

Mrs. Butler was exhausted by her journey and retired to her room almost immediately. I watched her slender figure go up the stairs, and with her black trailing gown and colorless face she was an embodiment of all that is lonely and helpless. Fred closed the door behind her and stood looking at Edith and me.

"I tell you, honey," he declared, "that brought into a cheerful home is suf- ficient cause for divorce. Isn't it, Jack?"

"She is ill," Edith maintained val- iantly. "She is my cousin, too, which gives her some claim on me, and my guest, which gives her more."

From somewhere above there came a sudden crash, followed by the an- nouncement made by a scared house- maid that Mrs. Butler had fainted.

Mrs. Butler was really ill, and Mar- gery insisted on looking after her. It was an odd coincidence, the widow of one state treasurer and the orphaned daughter of his successor. Both men had died violent deaths, in each case when a boiling under the political lid had threatened to blow it off.

The boys were allowed to have their dinner with the family that evening in honor of Mrs. Butler's arrival, and it was a riotous meal. Margery got back a little of her color. As I sat across from her and watched her expressions change from sadness to resignation and even gradually to amusement at the boys' antics, I wondered just how much she knew or suspected that she refused to tell me.

I was firmly embarked on the case now, and I tortured myself with one idea. Suppose I should find Wardrop guilty and I should find extenuating circumstances, what would I do—publish the truth, see him hanged or im- prisoned and break Margery's heart or keep back the truth, let her marry him and try to forget that I had had a hand in the whole wretched business?

Prove Wardrop innocent, I reasoned with myself, get to the bottom of this thing, and then—it would be man and man, a fair field and no favor. I sup- pose my proper attitude romantically them and her for you. Describe her— how she walked, what she liked to eat, what she wore; in this case what she didn't wear. In forty-eight hours she will have been seen in a hundred dif- ferent places, and one of them will be right. It will be a question of selec- tion—that is, if she is alive."

The publicity part of it I left to him, and I sent a special delivery that morn- ing to Bellwood asking Miss Letitia to say nothing and to refer reporters to me. I had already been besieged with them since my connection with the Fleming case, and a few more made no difference.

Burton attended to the matter thor- oughly. The 1 o'clock edition of an afternoon paper contained a short and vivid scarlet account of Miss Jane's disappearance. The evening editions were full and, while vague as to the manner of her leaving, were minute as regarded her personal appearance and characteristics.

To escape the threatened inundation of the morning paper men, I left the office early, and at 4 o'clock Margery and I stepped from a hill car into the park.

"I wish some one depended on me," she said pensively. "It's a terrible thing to feel that it doesn't matter to any one—not vitally, anyhow—whether one is around or not. To have all my responsibilities taken away at once and just to drift around like this—oh, it's dreadful. Besides my father, there was only one person in the world who cared about me, and I don't know where she is. Dear Aunt Jane!"

The sunlight caught the ring on her engagement finger, and she flushed suddenly as she saw me looking at it. We sat there for a while saying noth- ing. The long May afternoon was coming to a close. The paths began to fill with long lines of hurrying home- seekers, their day in office or factory at an end.

Then impulsively she held out her hand to me.

"You have been more than kind to me," she said hurriedly. "You have taken me into your home—and helped me through these dreadful days—and I will never forget it. Never!"

"I am not virtuous," I replied, look- ing down at her. "I couldn't help it. You walked into my life when you came to my office—was it only last week? The evil days are coming, I suppose, but just now nothing matters at all, save that you are you, and I am I."

She dropped her veil quickly, and we went back to the car. The prosaic world wrapped us around again. There was a heavy odor of restaurant coffee in the air. People bumped and jolted past us. To me they were only shad- ows. The real world was a girl in black and myself, and the girl wore a betrothal ring which was not mine.

Mrs. Butler came down to dinner that night. She was more cheerful than I had yet seen her, and she had changed her mournful garments to something a trifle less depressing. With her masses of fair hair dressed high and her face slightly animated, I realized what I had not done before, that she was the wreck of a very beau- tiful woman.

She used a cane when she walked, and after dinner in the library she was content to sit impassive, detached, propped with cushions, while Margery

"We have no news," I replied, "and don't let it get around, will you?"

He promised gravely.

day," he said. "That there is an old walled up cellar under the Maitland place. Have you looked there?" He was disappointed when I said we had,

and I was about to go when he called me back.

"Miss Jane didn't get her mail on Thursday, but on Friday that niece of hers came for it—two letters, one from the city and one from New York."

"Thanks," I returned, and went out into the quiet street.

I walked past the Maitland place, but the windows were dark and the house closed. Haphazard inquiry being out of the question, I took the 10 o'clock train back to the city. Why had Margery gone for Miss Jane's mail after the little lady was missing?
And why did Miss Jane carry on a clandestine correspondence?

prisoned and break Margery's heart or keep back the truth, let her marry him and try to forget that I had had a hand in the whole wretched business?

Prove Wardrop innocent, I reasoned with myself, get to the bottom of this thing, and then—it would be man and man, a fair field and no favor. I suppose my proper attitude romantically taken was to consider Margery's engagement ring an indissoluble barrier.
But this was not romance. I was fighting for my life happiness, and as to the ring—well, I am of the opinion that if a man really loves a woman and thinks he can make her happy he will tell her so if she is strung with engagement rings to the ends of her fingers. Dangerous doctrine? Well, this is not propaganda.

Tuesday found us all more normal.
Margery went with me along the hall
when I started for the office.

"You have not learned anything?"
she asked.

"Not much," I evaded. "Nothing definite, anyhow. Margery, you are not going back to the Monmouth avenue house again, are you?"

"Not just yet. I don't think I could.
I suppose later it will have to be sold,
but not at once. I shall go to Aunt Letitia's first."

"Very well," I said. "Then you are going to take a walk with me this afternoon in the park. I won't take no;
you need the exercise, and I need—to talk to you."

When she had agreed I went to the office. Burton was there. He had struck up an acquaintance with Miss Grant, the stenographer, and that usually frigid person had melted under the warmth of his red hair and his smile.
She was telling him about her sister's baby having the whooping cough.

When we had gone into the inner office and shut out Miss Grant and the whooping cough he was serious instantly.

"Well," he said. "I guess we've got Wardrop for theft, anyhow."

"Theft?" I inquired.

"Well, larceny, if you prefer legal terms. I found where he sold the pearls —in Plattsburg, to a wholesale jeweler named, suggestively, Cashdollar."

"Then," I said conclusively, "if he took the pearls and sold them, as sure as I sit here he took the money out of that Russia leather bag."

"I'm not so darned sure of it," said
Burton calmly.

If he had any reason he refused to give it. I told him, in my turn, of Carter's escape, added by the police, and he smiled. "For a suicide it's causing a lot of excitement," he remarked.
When I told him the little incident of the postoffice he was much interested.

"The old lady's in it somehow," he maintained. "She may have been lending Fleming money, for one thing.
How do you know it wasn't her hundred thousand that was stolen?"

"There's only one thing to do, and that is find Miss Jane. If she's alive she can tell something. If Miss Jane is dead—well, somebody killed her, and it's time it was being found out."

"It's easy enough to say find her."

"It's easy enough to find her," he exploded. "Make a noise about it. Send up rockets. Put a half column ad. in every paper in town or, better still, give the story to the reporters and let something at a time less depressing.

With her masses of fair hair dressed high and her face slightly animated, I realized what I had not done before, that she was the wreck of a very beautiful woman.

She used a cane when she walked, and after dinner in the library she was content to sit impassive, detached, propped with cushions, while Margery read to the boys in their night nursery and Edith embroidered.

Fred had been fussing over a play for some time, and he had gone to read to some manager or other. Edith already was spending the royalties.

"We could go a little ways out of town," she was saying, "and we could have an automobile. Margery says theirs will be sold, and certainly it will be a bargain."

Near me Mrs. Butler had languidly taken up the paper. Suddenly she dropped it, and when I stooped and picked it up I noticed she was trembling.

"Is it true?" she demanded. "Is Robert Clarkson dead?"

"Yes," I assented. "He has been dead since Sunday morning—a suicide."

"I'm glad, glad," she said. Then she grew weak and semi-hysterical, laughing and crying in the same breath.
When she had been helped upstairs—for in her weakened state it had been more of a shock than we realized—Margery came down, and we tried to forget the scene we had just gone through.

It was strange to contrast the way in which the two women took their similar bereavements. Margery represented the best type of normal American womanhood, Ellen Butler the neu-rasthenic; she demanded everything by her very helplessness and timidity.
She was a constant drain on Edith's ready sympathy. That night while I closed the house—Fred had not come in—I advised her to let Mrs. Butler go back to her sanatorium.

At 12:30 I was still downstairs. Fred was out, and I waited for him, being curious to know the verdict on the play. The bell rang a few minutes before 1 and I went to the door. Somebody in the vestibule was tapping the floor impatiently with his foot. When I opened the door I was surprised to find that the late visitor was Wardrop.
His eyes were sunk deep in his head,
his reddened lids and twitching mouth told of little sleep, of nerves ready to snap.

"I'm glad it's you," he said, by way of greeting. "I was afraid you'd have gone to bed."

"It's the top of the evening yet," I replied perfunctorily as I led the way into the library. Once inside, Wardrop closed the door and looked around him like an animal at bay.

"I came here," he said nervously, looking at the windows, "because I had an idea you'd keep your head. Mine's gone; I'm either crazy or I'm on my way there. Knox, there are people following me wherever I go; they eat where I eat; if I doze in my chair they come into my dreams!" He stopped there, then he laughed a little wildly.
"That last isn't sane, but it's true.
There's a man across the street now, eating an apple under a lamp post."

"Suppose you are under surveillance,"
I said. "It's annoying to have a defective following you around, but it's hardly serious. The police say now that Mr. Fleming killed himself. That was your own contention."

HOME COURSE IN SCIENTIFIC AGRICULTURE

ELEVENTH ARTICLE. FEEDING FARM ANI- MALS, NO. 1.

By E. W. ALLEN, Assistant Director of the Office of Experiment Stations, United States Department of Agriculture.

THE feeding of farm animals, like the use of fertilizers for crops, rests upon quite well defined general principles. The materials of the body are continually breaking down and being consumed, and to keep the animal in a healthy and vigorous condition there must be a constant supply of new material. If, in addition to repairing the wastes of the system and furnishing it with heat and energy, growth is to be made (as in the case of immature animals) or milk secreted an additional supply of food is required. To supply food in the right proportion to meet the various requirements of the animal without a waste of food nutrients constiand fat and, in addition to these, a class of materials called carbohydrates, defined below.

However dry a feeding stuff may appear to be, it always contains a considerable amount of water. The amount may be only from eight to fifteen pounds per 100 pounds of material, as in hay, straw or grain, but in green corn fodder and silage it amounts to nearly eighty pounds and in some roots to ninety pounds. This water, although it may add to the palatability of a food, is of no more benefit to the animal than water which it drinks.

Ash is what is left when the combustible part of a feeding stuff is burned away. It consists chiefly of lime, magnesia, potash, soda, iron, chlorine and carbonic, sulphuric and phosphoric acids and is used largely in making bones. From the ash constituents of the food the digestive organs of the animal select those which the animal needs, and the rest is voided in the manure. As a general rule, rations composed of a variety of nutritious foods contain sufficient ash to supply the requirements of the body. Corn, however, is poor in ash, and when fed extensively to growing animals, like pigs, it may be necessary to add to it some ash material, as wood ashes, charcoal or bonemeal.

Fat or the material which in analysis is dissolved from a feeding stuff by ether includes, besides real fats, wax, the green coloring matter of plants, etc. For this reason the ether extract is usually designated crude fat. The fat of food is either stored up in the body as fat or burned to furnish heat and energy.

Carbohydrates are usually divided into two groups: (1) nitrogen free extract, including starch, sugar, gums and the like, and (2) cellulose or fiber, the essential constituent of the walls of vegetable cells. Cotton fiber and wood pulp are nearly pure cellulose. Coarse fodders, like hay and straw, contain a large proportion of fiber, while most grains contain little fiber, but are rich in starch, sugar, etc. (nitrogen free extract.) The carbohydrates form the largest part of all vegetable foods. They are not permanently stored up as such in the animal body, but are either stored up as fat or burned in the system to produce heat and energy. They are one of the principal sources of animal fat.

Protein (or nitrogenous materials) is the name of a group of materials containing nitrogen. Protein materials are often designated as "flesh formers," because they furnish the materials for the lean flesh, but they also enter largely into the composition of blood, skin, muscles, tendons, nerves, hair, horns, wool, the casein and albumen of milk, etc. For the formation of these materials protein is absolutely indispensable. No substances free from nitrogen can be worked over into protein or fill the place of protein. Under certain conditions it is believed protein may be a source of fat in the body, and finally it may be burned, like the carbohydrates and fat, yielding heat and energy.

The value of the fat for producing heat is nearly two and a half times that of carbohydrates or protein. The sources of fat in the body are the fat, carbohydrates and probably the protein of the food, and the exclusive source of protein in the body is the protein in the food. These groups of actually digested by the animal. This is determined by digestion experiments with animals, and to secure approximately accurate figures the trials are repeated with a large number of animals and under various conditions. The digestibility of such coarse fodders as straw, coarse hay, etc., is relatively low. The digestibility, like the composition, varies somewhat for the same kind of feeding stuff grown under different conditions and fed to different animals.

Calculations have been made of the amounts of digestible protein, fat and carbohydrates contained in 100 pounds each of a large number of more commonly used feeding stuffs. They are the figures which the farmer has to consult to find the approximate food value of a material in selecting his feeding stuffs or making up a ration. They are available in various publications, including those of the United States department of agriculture.

For example, in 100 pounds of green corn fodder with an average amount of dry matter (27.7 pounds) there are contained approximately 1.10 pounds of digestible protein (materials containing nitrogen), 12.8 pounds of digestible carbohydrates (starch, sugar, fiber, etc.) and 0.37 pounds of digestible fat, and these materials when consumed in the body will yield 26,076 calories, or units, of heat, furnishing energy for work and bodily heat.

An ox standing in the stall requires less food nutrients than one which is worked hard every day. In standing in the barn it still requires some protein, fat and carbohydrates to perform the necessary functions of the body to maintain heat in winter, to grow a new coat of hair, etc. But if it is fed the same ration as when working hard the tendency is to get fat or waste the food.

The cow requires not only materials for maintenance, but must also have protein, fat and carbohydrates to make milk from. The milk contains water, fat, protein (casein, or curd), sugar and ash, and these are all made from the constituents of the food. If insufficient protein, fat and carbohydrates are contained in the food given her the cow supplies this deficiency for a time by drawing on her own body and gradually begins to shrink in quantity or quality of milk, or both. The stingy feeder cheats himself as well as the cow. She may suffer from hunger, although her belly is full of swale hay, but she also becomes poor and does not yield the milk and butter she should.

When England Needed Bread.

England was once on the verge of a bread famine. That was in 1800, when the wars with France combined with a succession of bad harvests to plunge the country into a state of general destitution. "A law was enacted," writes Mr. F. W. Hackwood, "prohibiting the sale of bread till it had been out of the oven at least twenty-four hours. Food was so scarce and dear that a portion of the population refused to starve in silence, and rioting broke out in many parts of England. The acts against 'forestalling and regrating'—that is, anticipating the markets so as to raise the price of foodstuffs—were rigorously enforced. A royal grant of £500 was made to one Thomas Toden, to enable him to prosecute a discovery made by him of a 'paste' as a substitute for wheat flour."—London Stand-tutes scientific feeding. It is by carefully studying the composition of feeding stuffs, the proportion in which they are digested by different animals and under different conditions and the requirement of animals for the various food nutrients when at rest, at work, giving milk, producing wool, mutton, beef, pork, etc., that the principles of feeding have been worked out. In applying these principles in practice the cost and special adaptations of different feeding stuffs must of course be taken into account.

The animal body is made up mainly, of four classes of substance—water, ash or mineral ingredients, fat and nitrogenous matters. Water constitutes from 40 to 60 per cent of the body and is an essential part. From 2 to 5 per cent of the weight of the body is ash. This occurs mainly in the bones. The fat varies greatly with the condition of the animal, but seldom falls below 6 per cent or rises above 30 per cent. The nitrogenous material or protein includes all of the materials containing nitrogen. All those outside this group are nitrogen free, or nonnitrogenous. Nitrogen occurs in plants and animals in various compounds grouped under the general name of protein. The flesh, skin, bones, muscles, internal organs, brain and nerves—in short, all of the working machinery of the body—are composed very largely of protein. The albuminoids are a class of compounds included under protein.

The food of herbivorous animals contains the same four groups of substances found in the body—viz, water, ash, protein (nitrogenous materials) and many it may be burned, like the carbohydrates and fat, yielding heat and energy.

The value of the fat for producing heat is nearly two and a half times that of carbohydrates or protein. The sources of fat in the body are the fat, carbohydrates and probably the protein of the food, and the exclusive source of protein in the body is the protein in the food. These groups of food materials are termed nutrients.

To a certain extent at least the nutrients may replace one another, although, as stated above, no other nutrient can take the place of protein. The fat and carbohydrates perform similar functions, and, to a large extent, carbohydrate materials may replace fat in the food, even when a large fat production is demanded of the animal, as in the case of the cow.

The composition of feeding stuffs, or the proportion in which the nutrients occur, is determined by chemical analysis. Only a portion of the nutrients is of direct use to the animal—i. e., only that digested. A part of the food is dissolved and otherwise altered by the juices of the mouth, stomach and intestines absorbed from the alimentary canal, and in the form of chyle passes into the blood and finally serves to nourish and sustain the body. The other portion is excreted.

As the rates of digestibility are not constant for different foods and as only the digestible portion is of any nutritive use to the animal, it is essential to know in the case of each feeding stuff what part of its protein, fat and carbohydrates (the total quantity of which is shown by analysis) is Flower Baskets.

The ordinary berry, grape or peach basket may be made into a very attractive holder for flowers or fruit. It may be prettily colored in several ways. Package dye will do, but one may also color with materials found in the home. Onion skins, when boiled, will give a good yellow; beet juice, red and pink; boiled parsley leaves, a green shade. The leaves should be put in water to soak overnight; then only a few minutes' boiling is needed to extract the color. A handful of salt or alum will set the color if added to the boiling dye water. When the baskets are dry decorate with pretty ribbon.

Floral Hats.

Dainty little bunches of flowers, such as moss roses, forgetmenots, small daisies and many of the wild flowers, are effectively used in some of the new hats. Entire wreaths of flowers are also seen, but they are not so popular as the more simply trimmed hats.

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience: "I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Method Treatment and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

MAKING FARM

THERE is much interest in the fact that a Jew is giving one of the best illustrations to be seen in the Chicago district of what may be accomplished by intensive methods on a little farm.

Joseph Gould learned farming in Russia and has a thorough knowledge of agricultural principles. Six years ago he bought ten acres of land in the outskirts of Elgin. This tract is wholly devoted to vegetable gardening and is returning $1,500 to $2,000 a year, besides the main part of the family's living.

Mr. Gould sells direct to consumers. He has observed that farmers are weakest in the selling end of the business. One of the advantages of selling direct is that knowledge is gained respecting market conditions. The producer then soon learns which articles are most in demand and profitable.

For six months in the year Mr. Gould is delivering a wagon load of produce daily, the loads averaging about $10 in value. The labor is all performed by himself and family. By renting a few acres adjoining his tract he is able to keep a cow and team without buying fodder and adds a little to the output of his own land.

His little farm is level and naturally rich. By his methods of cultivation he has improved the soil without fallowing or "resting." He follows a system of crop rotation whereby the soil qualities which are exhausted by one crop are restored by the next. No fertilizer is used, except common stable manure.

While he is not an experimenter, some of his results are remarkable. In one recent season he broke the record in that locality by raising three crops on one patch of ground. Between the 15th of April and the 1st of October he

The late Dr. Knapp said: "Preach back to the farm all you want. But just show the boy how he can make more money on the farm than he can by going to the city and you won't do any more preaching."

THE LITTLE PAY

had planted and grown to maturity a crop of radishes, one of onions and another of beets, one following the other as soon as the ground could be cultivated. He did not plow for these successive crops, but used disk and harrow. It is quite common with him to raise two crops in a season. In some instances he follows early potatoes, carrots and radishes with sweet corn, string beans or beets. An early crop of lettuce he gets out of the way in time for celery.

Various combinations of this kind can be worked successfully on any little farm. A second growth of cabbage is secured by a simple process. The first head is cut when mature, perhaps early in July, after which several small heads appear on the stalk. By cutting away all but one of these an excellent head will be developed by late summer.

On truck farms it is essential to apply well rotted manure liberally. The ordinary land will allow double cropping to a considerable extent. For instance, after taking off a crop of rye or oats it is feasible to sow millet, which can be harvested by the 1st of October. This is helpful to the soil and adds a nice lot of fodder to the winter supply. The millet seed is of the highest value to poultry.

In the fall, after the millet has been taken off, there is ample time to apply a good coating of manure and plow the ground before winter sets in. Such a tract will be in fine shape in the spring. After a crop of wheat or oats it is advisable to raise corn for two seasons, then clover for at least two years. There is great value in cowpeas as a rotative crop. This intensive farming is interesting and profitable, no matter what the size of the tract may be.

In digging your wealth from the soil remember that it should be done in a manner that will leave the land fertile enough for your posterity to produce something on which to subsist after you are gone.

COST OF RAISING COLTS.

Found to Be Higher in the Eastern States Than in the Western.

Reports have been received from about 10,000 correspondents of the bureau of statistics of the department of agriculture upon the cost of rearing colts on the farms to the age of three years. The average for the United States is found to be $104.00, or, deducting the value of work done by the horse before he has passed his third year—namely, $7.52—the net cost is $96.54. This is 70.9 per cent of the selling value of such horses, $136.17.

The cost varies widely by states, from an average of $69.50 for New

PRACTICALLY GIVEN UP TO DIE

"Fruit-a-tives" Cured Kidneys and Bladder

WILLIAMSTOWN, ONT., JULY 27th. 1910

"I have much pleasure in testifying to the almost marvellous benefit I have derived from taking 'Fruit-a-tives'. I was a lifelong sufferer from Chronic Constipation, and the only medicine I ever secured to do me any real good was 'Fruit-a-tives'. This medicine cured me when everything else failed. Also, last spring, I had a severe attack of Bladder Trouble coupled with Kidney Trouble, and 'Fruit-a-tives' cured these complaints for me, when the physicians attending me had practically given me up.

I am now over eighty years of age and I can strongly recommend 'Fruit-a-tives' for Chronic Constipation and Bladder and Kidney Troubles"

JAMES DINGWALL.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices—and is the greatest kidney, bladder and liver medicine ever put on the market.

Wealthy Women Frequently Advance the Funds Needed.

The ability of notorious criminals not only to pay the expenses of being legally represented whilst the tedious process of the law operates, but to pay the heavy cost of being defended by famous counsel whose fees range from 100 guineas to 200 guineas, must often have puzzled those members of the public who are not aware of what takes place behind the scenes. In cases where large sums of money have been embezzled the circumstances of the accused are usually sufficiently affluent to allow of the necessary funds for his defence being available, but in cases of murder, where the prisoners are, nine times out of ten, people in a poor way of life, there are no such resources, and the public are entitled to wonder where the money comes from. It will come as a surprising revelation to them to learn that rich ladies, reading in the newspapers details of the proceedings at the police court hearing, and struck by some interesting or pathetic phase of the case, frequently come forward and volunteer to defray the expenses of having the accused defended.

This happened notably in the case of a woman tried for murder in London, who, it was early apparent, was more sinned against than sinning.

Two wealthy sisters, who happened to read particulars of the murder in one of the morning papers, were so moved by the sad facts revealed that not only did they engage a well-known solicitor to defend the unhappy woman, but they gave him carte blanche in the matter of money in order that the best possible counsel could be engaged, and the case for the defence worked up to the utmost advantage.

The two ladies acted not out of love of a new excitement, but out of the charitable and humane impulse, being convinced that the woman had been driven to the awful step that dered silk buttons, these coats appropriate for afternoon wear be daintiest lingerie frocks. The wrappers are especially suited for young girls. The challis, in flowered patterns, is daintily edged with lace and ribbon to make lovely rest robes and informal dresses. Sometimes an accordion skirt of bordered challis is fast to a short empire waist made of wide strips of wide val lace and the whole is decorated with rosettes and flowers and ends in a ribbon sash. Divested of its ribbon such gowns can be easily laundered. Of the plaits will be washed out, they are scantily put in, anyway, to the gown from bulkiness.

WINDOW SHADES.

versive Styles Are in the Best Taste.

Shades are not for decoration, but utility merely, and they should be chosen with an eye to their unobtrusiveness. The use of pure white shades ways had its supporters, but this is apt to result in the necessity of sets, the outside of white and inside one of dark green to deaden light. White also soils easily. Shades alone are not attractive from any point of view; neither are the new ones sometimes seen.

One cannot afford new shades as a rule. To refresh the housecleaning, remove the shades from the rollers, being careful to save the short tacks. Make a new shade from the unworn end of the curtain. Insert the stick, straighten the end and tack it to the roller. Al-though shades with a knife, using a straight edge as a guide for the knife, makes a clean, smooth cut.

Trim all the pieces cut from large window shades when they are trimmed to fit smaller windows. From pieces may be made useful covers for sheet music, blank books, letters, memoranda or even for lines and books. Pretty home-scraps and postcard albums also may be made by folding the rem-into pages. If for cards slits may be cut with a penknife. The shades will not tear, and their soft tints pleasing backgrounds. All these shades may be decorated in gold, ink or other colors.

ing most of the hairs from getting in the pail. Indeed, there will be very few of them find their way there if this plan is adopted.

The cut represents a strip of cloth long enough to pass around a cow's body and tie the enlarged portion of it coming over the udder. The four holes are clipped in it to let the teats extend down so one can get hold of them in milking, yet the surrounding cloth prevents the myriad of loose hairs from dropping down into the milk pail—in fact, it just about bars dust, filth and everything else from entering except the milk.

This strip could extend well up on the side of the cow and be just that much better. If a buckle be attached to one end and a small strap to the other it can be fastened and unfastened in much less time than by tying the ends of the strip of cloth.

A Germ Killing Whitewash.

Dr. Marshall, a Pennsylvania institute speaker, says that whitewashing of dairy barns should be done for the sake of general sanitation, but the main point in the fight against tuberculosis is the elimination of the dark, stables and filthy stall conditions. Where clean methods are used in the keeping of cows he advises the use of a compound made from one pound of chloride of lime and five gallons of whitewash, which, when put on the walls and stable partitions, acts as an effective preventive of diseases.

How the Germans Store Mangels.

The Germans pile mangels up on the ground about one yard high and as long as any one has mangels. They cover them with a foot layer of straw and on top of this a foot layer of earth. On the south they keep an opening in which they place a few bundles of straw. When the weather allows it they go into the pile by moving those straw bundles.—Rural New Yorker.

Disking or Plowing?

Fall plowing is to be preferred to spring plowing. This applies also to land for corn that is to be manured during the winter and spring. A reasonable dressing of coarse manure may be disked in without difficulty and is in better position to aid the crop than when plowed under.—Kansas Industrialist.

Best Soil For Roses.

The soil best adapted to roses is one which contains 8 to 12 per cent clay and is well supplied with silt and the finest grades of sand.—Farm Progress.

A Lark's Lofty Flight.

Some Bavarian officers experimenting with a balloon 6,000 feet aloft noticed a little black speck which seemed to accompany them and which, they thought, was one of the cards they carried for throwing out reports and that the dropping of the balloon drew it along, but on looking at the barometer they found that the balloon was rising and not dropping. Suddenly, however, a loud chirping showed that it was a lark, which, flying at this extraordinary height, had been frightened by the balloon.

years. The average for the United States is found to be $104.00, or, deducting the value of work done by the horse before he has passed his third year—namely, $7.52—the net cost is $96.54. This is 70.9 per cent of the selling value of such horses, $136.17.

The cost varies widely by states, from an average of $69.50 for New Itemized, the cost is: Service fee, $12.95; value of time lost by mare in foaling, $10.00; breaking to halter, $2.22; veterinary service, $2.04; care and shelter, first year $4.98, second year $5.36, third year $6.35; cost of grain fed, first year $4.98, second year $7.14, third year $9.50; hay, first year $4.14, second year $6.61, third year $8.48; pasture, first year $2.50, second year $5.41, third year $6.21; other costs, $5.01; total, $104.00.

The total cost for all feed is $56.30, being $21.68 for grain, $19.23 for hay, $14.18 for pasture and $1.21 for other feeds. The total cost of care and shelter is $16.69. Of the total cost 54 per cent is charged to feeds, 16 per cent to care and shelter and 30 per cent to other items, as enumerated.

GROWN IN LEGAL SOIL.

In determining the real character of a contract courts look to its purposes rather than to the name given to it by the parties.—Steele v. State, 48 So. 673.

A contract of employment which is subject to termination when unsatisfactory to the employer must be terminated on that ground honestly and in good faith.—Mackenzie v. Minis, Ga. 63 S. E. 900.

An interest in real estate, which the owner attempted to will under conditions that were invalid, descends to the person or persons who would have been entitled to such interest had no will been made.—Kinne v. Phares, Kan. 100 Pac. 287.

Kindergarten Criticism.

The other night a pantomime comedian was in the course of delivering one of the long and not always uniformly funny soliloquies for which he is famed when there came in a lull an unexpected comment from the stalls. It was in the high treble voice of a girl child, and the words, audible on stage and in several parts of the auditorium, were, "Mummy, I wouldn't mind if they pulled down the blind now." It was dramatic criticism of a dramatic kind, and perhaps the outspoken child was not the only person in the house who would have had no objection to a dropping of the curtain.—Glasgow News.

a woman who, however, she decided the unhappy woman, but they gave him carte blanche in the matter of money in order that the best possible counsel could be engaged, and the case for the defence worked up to the utmost advantage.

The two ladies acted not out of love of a new excitement, but out of the charitable and humane impulse, being convinced that the woman had been driven to the awful step that she had taken.

They had the satisfaction in the end of saving her from the gallows, and, ultimately, after a term of penal servitude, returned to society.

But perhaps the most remarkable instance of all in which the generosity of ladies, complete strangers to the accused, has operated to provide criminals with highly-paid counsel was a murder trial, which not so long since was a cause celebre in London. It will long be remembered, not merely for the length of time which the case, from start to finish, occupied, but for the pertinacity with which it was fought. Money to provide the sinews of war came from a mysterious but never-ending source.

There was money for solicitors and counsel; there was money for witness's expenses, for inquiries of a costly nature; for all manner of expenditure, necessary in the accused's interests, there was money available. Now the money could not have come from the criminal, for he had not $250 in the world; it could not have come from the man's relatives, for they were equally poor and, finally, it had not been provided by public subscription, as is sometimes the case.

Where, then, did it come from?

The solicitors and the counsel both knew, but they kept the source a dead secret. Only the other day was the truth revealed. The barrister confided to a friend that the mysterious source was a title lady, bearer of one of the most respected names in the kingdom, who had voluntarily offered to bear the expenses of the defence on the condition that her name was kept a secret.

She said she was interested in the man, and thought, if properly defended, he would prove his innocence. What happened to the man cannot be told here, for that would immediately identify the case, which, for obvious reasons, would be inadvisable, though it may be said he was sentenced to death and the penalty continued to penal servitude for life.

Most astonishing of all, the same barrister confessed that he knew of other cases where titled ladies had been sufficiently interested in criminals to pay for their defence, and he gave chapter and verse for his remarkable assertion.

Got the Autograph

At Carlsbad on one occasion Brahms' physician, Dr. Grunberger, asked the composer for his autograph for a young lady admirer, but Brahms scolded him for making a nuisance of himself and refused to give it. Some weeks later, at his departure from Carlsbad, Brahms handed to the doctor an envelope inscribed, "With the cordial thanks of Johannes Brahms." Noticing a broad grin on the doctor's face, he asked: "What makes you look so cheerful? You don't know yet what the envelope contains." "Nor do I care," retorted the doctor. "The envelope is the main thing. Much obliged for the autograph!"

At Napanee, before Judge Price, an action brought by Guy M. Bebee, of the township of Denbigh, Abinger and Ashby, against John Gilmour, Melissa Gilmour, his wife, and Simon Ball, of the same townships, for malicious prosecution, was tried. At the June sessions, 1912, Guy M. Bebee was tried for forgery and theft, but was acquitted and the defendants in this action of Bebee vs. Gilmour, were the principle witnesses against Bebee, hence this action for malicious prosecution. Verdict for defendants without costs if action goes no further; if appealed, costs to be in discretion of court.

Wednesday morning, between nine and ten o'clock a pitch-in occurred between two freight trains on the Grand Trunk railway bridge, at the east end of the town. A freight was standing on the bridge and another one coming through the cut crashed into the van. The end of the van was smashed, and the sudden application of the air brakes caused a flat car, the thirteenth back from the engine, to buckle in the centre and fall over on the east side of the track. No one was injured but the west bound track was blocked for about two and a half hours. The auxiliary from Belleville came down and after dumping the wrecked flat car into the ditch, and setting the front trucks of the following car on the rails, soon had the road open for traffic.

SPRING

We are pleased to announce that we have been appointed sole representatives in Napanee for the House of Hobberlin, tailors to the Canadian gentleman. This firm we have been informed employs a most skillful and artistic designer to whom they pay the modest sum of $8000 per annum. Their sample outfit is the most elaborate we have ever seen from any house doing a special order business. We KNOW their Cloths are of a high order and the range embraces every line that a good dresser could desire. They absolutely guarantee every garment they turn out to be perfect in fit and workmanship. Money back if not satisfactory, and no grumbling. What more could any man ask. We would be delighted to show their range of samples to any man contemplating the purchase of a new suit. If you order and the garments are not entirely satisfactory to YOU it will cost you nothing whatever but the time you spent in making your selection. We know of no fairer way of doing business.

Samples are now ready for inspection at
